were purchased in Holland and East Friesland and converted into meetinghouses (external remodeling to look like a church was forbidden). In Rotterdam such a building was in possession of the old Flemish at least by 1580. During the period of persecution the Anabaptists did not even have regular meeting places. A martyr of 1556 at Antwerp, Claes de Praet, testified that they met "there where Christ and His apostles held their meetings, in the woods, in the fields, on the seashore, and sometimes in homes." In larger towns such as Amsterdam meetings were held in private homes from the beginning. For the sake of safety, meeting places were constantly changed and messengers visited the members or sent notes to them to announce the place and the hour of the next meeting. This was true not only in the Netherlands and North Germany, but also in the South. A document of 1539 in the Strasbourg archives gives the exact wording of such a note which has been preserved: "Grace and peace from God the Father through Jesus Christ, our Lord and Savior. Amen. Beloved Jacob and dear Elsbeth, I am letting you know that on the coming Tuesday a meeting will be held at Schilken in the house where we were the last time. And don't come so late as the last time, and let the old man in Westhoffen also know. With this I commend you to God, peace be with you all who love God from the heart. Amen." Ruprecht Schwarz is named as one of the notifiers for the Strasbourg Anabaptists. His testimony (1539) describes the meeting places in or near Strasbourg as follows: "Says: They assembled in Schwabenloch and behind the Guten Leuten, also on the Illkirchen Nachtweid and in the Siegelshheimer Forest. Says, the Swiss Brethren and the Hofmannites were not united; the former were about 100, the latter not more than 5. They no longer attended the preaching [of the state church], because the preachers did not practice the ban, allowed good and bad go, that is abominable." In the Low Countries the man who notified the members of the time and place of meeting was called the "Weetdoener" (q.v.).

Little direct description of Anabaptist worship is available. There can be little doubt, however, about its simplicity, and that it included basically, at least after the very earliest days, Scripture reading, prayer, preaching, and singing. An early discipline found in the Berne archives says: "The brethren and sisters should meet at least three or four times each week to study the teachings of Christ and His apostles and admonish each other in the Lord. When they meet they should read something they understand which God has laid on their heart. The others should be quiet and listen so that two or three are not speaking at the same time and hindering the others from hearing. The psalter should be read daily by all. . . . The food for meals during times of meeting should be furnished by the brethren at whose home the meeting is held. . . . The Lord's Supper should be observed as often as the brethren come together." Peter Riedemann's Confession (c1540) describes a Hutterite worship service as follows: "When we come together, we do so with the desire to encourage and awaken our hearts in the grace of God, to walk in the Lord's sight with great er diligence and attention. Therefore, the people are first encouraged to mark diligently and to consider why we have met and come together, that they may prepare their hearts for prayer, so that they may come worthily before the Lord and pray for what concerns the church and all her members. After this we give thanks to God for all the good that He has given us through Christ, and for accepting us into His grace and revealing to us His truth. This is followed by an earnest prayer that He keep us faithful and devout therein to the end, and supply all our desires and needs, and open our hearts that we may use His Word with profit, hear, accept, and keep it. When this is done, one proceeds to proclaim the Lord's Word faithfully, according to the grace given by God, encouraging the heart to fear the Lord and to remain in His fear. When all this is completed the minister commends the church to God the Lord and lets them depart one from another, each to his place. When, however, we come together to keep the Lord's Memory or Supper the people are encouraged and taught for one, two, or three days and told vividly what the Lord's Supper is, what happens there and what one does thereby, and how one should prepare himself worthily to receive the same. Every day, however, has also its thanksgiving and prayer. When all this has taken place, and the Lord's Supper has been kept, a hymn of praise is sung to the Lord. Then the people are admonished to walk in accordance with what they have shown to be in their hearts, and then they are commended to the Lord and allowed to separate" (Riedemann's Confession, 129 f.).

Singing was certainly a part of Anabaptist worship, both in the North and the South, although at times it was suppressed because of danger. By the 1560's at least five distinct Anabaptist hymnals had been printed, besides earlier hymn leaflets and pamphlets. One hymnal was Swiss, one Lower Rhine, and three Dutch. The first part of the Ausbund is composed of hymns written in 1535 in Passau, "composed and sung" by imprisoned Swiss Brethren, as the title page says. Over 130 Anabaptist hymn writers are known. Songs were used in evangelism. Christian Neff says, "A flood of religious songs poured over the young brotherhood like a vivifying and refreshing stream." (See Music, Church; Hymnology; Tunes.) This was in spite of the fact that Conrad Grebel, in line with Zwingli, opposed all music, including singing in worship. Riedemann's Confession contains an article "Concerning Singing" (123), which says among other things, "To sing spiritual songs is pleasing to God, if we sing in the right way, that is, attentively, in the fear of God and are inspired by the Spirit of Christ. . . . Among us we do not allow other than spiritual songs to be sung."

Anabaptist worship traditions were long perpetuated in the worship of their descendants, in many cases down to the present day, as will be seen in the following sections of this article. H.S.B.

Paul M. Miller, "Worship Among the Early Anabaptists," MQR XXX (1956) 235-46; Peter Rideman, Account of Our Religion, Doctrine and Faith (Bridgnorth, England, 1950, translated from the German Rechen-schaft of 1565).

Dutch Tradition and Practice. During the persecution period public worship of the Mennonites in the Netherlands was, of course, impossible; meetings then could be held only secretly. But by c1575 church services were held publicly, though until 1795 a number of restrictions were made by the magistrates concerning Mennonite meetings; particularly in the 17th century these restrictions often were rather rigorous. Mennonite meetinghouses then were not permitted on main streets and were not allowed to look like churches; hence a number of hidden and barnlike meetinghouses. At Aardenburg, Leiden, and other towns the public services of the Mennonites were not permitted to begin until the Reformed services had finished. But gradually these restrictions were dropped. In the 17th and 18th centuries religious services at Amsterdam, Haarlem, Rotterdam, and other larger towns were usually held twice each Sunday, and during the winter months also on a weekday, usually on Wednesday. In the country there was mostly one meeting on Sunday morning and in small congregations sometimes only each fortnight. Afternoon or evening services are now rather seldom.

Concerning the order of service in early times and in the 17th century there is only scarce information. Simon Rues gave circumstantial information on Mennonite public worship in 1742 in his book Tegenwoordige Staet der Doopsgezinden (Amsterdam, 1745). At this time there was a considerable difference between the worship services of the Lamists (q.v.) and the Zonists (q.v.) on the one hand and the Fijne (q.v.) Mennonites on the other hand. The order of service among the Fijne was usually as follows: hymn by the congregation, opening address by the minister, prayer, sermon, another prayer, closing hymn by the congregation; the benediction by the preacher dates from the early 18th century; before this time the closing hymn ended the service. For the prayers, always silent, the congregation knelt. No offering was taken, not even at the exit. The minister read his sermon from manuscript while seated on a chair. He wore no special garb. The order used by the Lamists and Zonists was largely influenced by that of the Calvinists: invocation by the minister, singing of a Psalm, a long prayer by the minister, then mostly, but not always, Scripture reading, sermon, from the early 18th century interrupted by congregational singing, during which an offering was usually taken, prayer after the sermon, another Psalm, benediction, and offering at the exit. In some churches, as the Amsterdam Lamist Church, there was Scripture reading before the minister mounted the pulpit. The minister stood while praying and preaching. In the 17th and 18th centuries the minister wore a robe with bands and a steek (three-cornered hat). Baptism and communion services, of course, had a somewhat different order. Among the Dutch Mennonite congregations of Flemish or Frisian background the worshipers remained seated throughout the service; the pastor or the deacons distributed bread and wine. This practice is still observed. In the congregations of Waterlander descent the attendants gather around one or more communion tables. (This practice, introduced by Hans de Ries, q.v., was borrowed from the Calvinists.)

At present the ordinary Sunday service, varying slightly from congregation to congregation, takes place as follows: invocation, congregational singing, Scripture reading, prayer, hymn, sermon, organ, prayer (often the Lord's Prayer), hymn, and benediction. In most churches the offering is taken only at the exit. In 1948 a subcommittee of the A.D.S. compiled a Kanselboek (q.v.; book for the pulpit), containing suggestions for the order of the regular services as well as for a number of special meetings, like baptism and communion services.

Organs, the first of which was adopted in a Mennonite church in 1762, were until c1890 used only to accompany congregational singing, but since that time the organs, now found in all Dutch Mennonite meetinghouses, have a special function in the worship service. Choir (q.v.) singing is practiced in only a few churches and never regularly; solo singing and the use of other instruments than organs are practically unknown. vbZ.

* * *

Prussian-Russian Tradition. Early Mennonite practices in Danzig, Prussia, Poland, and Russia were very similar to those of the early Dutch Mennonites. The meetings during the 16th-17th centuries took place mostly in private homes, barns, or sheds, partly because of pioneer conditions, but also because Mennonites were not permitted to worship in conspicuous public buildings. The Frisian Mennonite Church of Danzig was permitted to erect a meetinghouse in 1638, located in a garden and not distinguished from a residence. Most of the early buildings were in the name of some church member and not of the congregation. After the song leader had announced and led the hymn the sermon followed. The chairs for the ministers and deacons were located along the longer side of the wall on an elevation. There was no pulpit, but the central chair was a little higher. The minister presented his sermon while seated, and without notes. Gradually the practice of the minister delivering his sermon standing behind a pulpit, making use of outlines or notes, was introduced. Hans von Steen (q.v.) deeply deplored this innovation, fearing that "the beautiful simplicity of Menno's church was more and more disappearing."

Gradually the Prussian Mennonite churches adjusted themselves to their environment in their worship services by introducing some more elaborate elements of worship. The city churches, which had trained ministers, depended more or less on the taste of the individual minister, while the rural churches retained old practices for a longer period. A handbook for the minister and worship services was introduced quite early in some churches (see Ministers' Manuals). In some city churches communion tables were introduced and the ministers accepted the traditional clerical garb of the surrounding Lutheran Church during the worship service.

After the earliest practice, in which the sermons and exhortations were delivered extempore, the written sermon was introduced by the ministers of Holland and Prussia. Large collections of written sermons (q.v.) have been preserved. In Russia the tradition of reading the sermons was continued. In many instances, but not always, these sermons were prepared and written by the minister delivering them. He would repeat the sermon, stating on the first page on what occasions the sermon had been delivered. Many sermons were handed down from generation to generation, as is still the case among the conservative Mennonites of Manitoba and Mexico. In Russia, through revivalistic influences, this practice was gradually given up. One of the pioneers in free preaching was Bernhard Harder (q.v.), who began to preach heart-warming evangelistic sermons. Today among the Mennonites of Russian background in North and South America, with the exception of the very conservative groups, sermons are as a rule composed and delivered by the minister himself and delivered extempore—possibly with notes. Some ministers write their sermons out, but commit them to memory before delivering them.

In Russia the simple worship service of the early Dutch and Prussian tradition was perpetuated. But in the middle of the 19th century new and more spontaneous patterns of worship developed under the influence of the Pietists and Baptists, and were introduced first among the newly organized (1860) Mennonite Brethren. Some of the characteristics were the introduction of lighter hymns (Paul Gerhardt) and a prayer meeting before the preaching during the Sunday morning worship, preceded by Scripture reading and admonishing to prayer by one of the brethren of the congregation. The prayers were pronounced audibly by brothers and sisters in the congregation, young and old.

The worship service among the Mennonites who came from Prussia and Russia to America in 1874 ff. resembled that of the congregations from which they had come. Only gradually adjustments were made. This was first noticeable when the members of a congregation and the ministers came from various backgrounds in Russia and Prussia and adjustment to one pattern became necessary. Additional changes took place when the ministers received special training and changed from the German language to English. The worship practices of a congregation in a rural setting with a minister who has had no special training usually differ from those of a city church with a minister who has had theological training and especially if he has attended a non-Mennonite theological institution with liturgical leanings. Again a congregation with a minister who has received his training in a Bible institute will likely promote spontaneous forms of worship. In general, however, the colleges and the conference seminaries as well as the handbooks produced for this purpose do and will continue to promote uniformity along these lines. An innovation which is almost universal is the mimeographing or printing of worship bulletins (q.v.) which include the order of worship and the announcements for the week.

Hesitancy to collect money during the services for causes of the congregation or conference for a time hindered the introduction of this practice in some places, but it has become an integral part of every worship service. This practice is increasing among Mennonites who have come from Europe more recently, and is gradually being accepted by even the more conservative groups.

In the early days singing was not necessarily an integral part of the congregational worship, but later became a very essential part. During the latter part of the 18th century, organs (q.v.) were introduced in Holland and Germany, but in Russia and America not until the early 20th century. In Russia and America also choirs were introduced during the beginning of the 20th century and have become an integral part in many worship services, but not in Germany and Holland. The most conservative groups have neither organs nor choirs.

As a rule the worship order in General Conference Mennonite churches is as follows: Organ prelude, invocation, hymn, responsive reading or Scripture reading, prayer, choir, offering, hymn, sermon, hymn, benediction, organ postlude; or organ prelude, hymn, call to worship, invocation and Lord's Prayer, hymn, responsive reading, Scripture reading, prayer, offering, hymn, sermon, prayer and benediction, hymn, organ postlude.

As a rule, worship services formerly lasted up to two or three hours. Today a worship service hardly ever exceeds an hour, of which about half is devoted to the sermon and the other half to singing, Scripture reading, responsive reading, prayer, and offering. Formerly announcements were made from the pulpit in connection with the worship service. Today they have been eliminated in those congregations that use church bulletins. Most of the churches have ushers, who greet the worshiper at the door and help him locate a seat, and pass the collection plates.

Seating of the sexes in worship services was formerly universally separate. The most common form earlier was to have the women seated in the central part of the meetinghouse, with the men seated around them on the outside on benches facing inward, although in Russia and America the more common practice was to have the men on the right and the women on the left side of a central aisle. (See also Architecture, Music, Hymnology, Organs, Sermons, Ministers' Handbooks, Singing, Choirs.)

C.K., vñZ.

S. F. Rues, Aufrichtige Nachrichten von dem gegenwärtigen Zustande der Mennoniten oder Taufgesinnten (Jena, 1743) 46, 67, 128; N. van der Zijpp, Geschiedenis der Doopsgezinden in Nederland (Arnhem, 1952) 110; H. G. Mannhardt, Die Danziger Mennonitengemeinde (Danzig, 1919) 104; James Bixel, "Music in Worship," Menn. Life XIII (July 1958).

* * *

Swiss-South German Tradition. The worship of the Mennonites of Switzerland and South Germany was marked by simplicity, sincerity, and directness. Regular meetings for worship, prayer, preaching, and admonition, led by an elder or minister, were held in forests (e.g., at Immelhausen in Baden, as late as 1654), in remote farmhouses or barns, or in rooms in homes (sometimes especially built for such purposes). Meetinghouses (q.v.), at first forbidden by intolerant authorities, came late. The earliest were built in the Palatinate, e.g., Weierhof 1770, but most of them after 1800; Montbéliard 1832; in Alsace the first was Birkenhof 1845; in Switzerland, Basel-Binningen 1841; but most at the end of the 19th century, e.g., Langnau 1888. These meeting-houses were simple, unadorned, without tower or bell (except Ibersheim 1836), but usually with pulpits in the middle of one end which were sometimes somewhat elevated in imitation of the typical Protestant pulpit, but without organs (harmoniums were introduced later), men and women sitting separate.

In America simple meetinghouses were built from the beginning, probably in part modeled after the Quaker meetinghouse since the early immigrants had had no experience in Europe in building them. In some instances instead of a pulpit a table was placed in the middle of the long side, replaced later by a long pulpit, and in the first quarter of the 20th century by a small one-man type of pulpit. The pulpit still remained in the central location, symbolic of the central place of preaching in the worship. Special communion tables were not and are still not used. All the ministers sat on a long bench behind the table or pulpit. Song leaders sat around a table placed in front of the pulpit, from which they led the singing, seated; after the table disappeared they sat usually on the first or second bench. Standing to lead the singing came in only in the 20th century. The Amish never adopted meetinghouses, and to this day meet in homes, which customarily have a large room built for worship purposes, backless benches being hauled by wagon from place to place.

In Europe and America in earlier times meetings were customarily held once every two weeks in the morning, although neighboring congregations usually alternated, making it possible to attend services every week. Most families "went visiting" neighbors and friends for Sunday dinner on the open Sunday. Some conservative congregations in the East maintained the custom of biweekly services until far into the 20th century.

The order of service and manner of worship in both Europe and America was always simple, sober, and nonliturgical, with emphasis on the sermon, which was usually admonitory, didactic, and practical. Singing was always included, usually one or two hymns at the beginning, one after the Scripture reading and prayer, and one after the sermon. One minister "made the opening," i.e., read a Scripture selection (in Amish congregations determined by a traditional list of pericopes for each Sunday, since 1916 available in printed form), followed by kneeling silent prayer (replaced by audible prayer at various dates, but still silent in traditional congregations of certain sections such as Franconia and Lancaster). The sermon, delivered extempore by a second minister, was usually quite long (now reduced to 30-40 minutes), followed by kneeling prayer always closed by the Lord's Prayer. The latter is now widely dropped, but still practiced in parts of Lancaster and Franconia. The benediction, formerly given seated without the preacher's hand raised, was preceded by a closing hymn. The announcements were formerly made only just before or after the benediction. The offering was placed in boxes at the exits, but is now in America taken by passing collection plates through the congregation. Ushers were unknown, and still are not used in Europe. Offerings were not taken regularly until modern times, earlier only for special needs. Ordinary expenses were met by assessments or payments to the deacon. The Sunday school brought with it offerings (at first for children "penny" offerings) for expenses, still customary, but church offerings were held at first once monthly for missions; now the common practice is to take them every Sunday, in some places even on Sunday evenings. The custom of worshipers standing silently in prayer before sitting down in the pew, or of bowing the head in prayer in the pew, which has become common in Europe, has not been adopted in America.

Musical instruments are still strictly banned (a few exceptions in Latin American churches) from all services of the Mennonite Church (MC) and all related and conservative groups. Even in the worship of the Swiss congregations in Ohio and Indiana who later joined the General Conference Mennonite Church, and in the descendant groups from the Amish such as the Evangelical Mennonites and the Central Conference, they were admitted only late in the 19th or early in the 20th century (see Organs). The Brethren in Christ did not permit them until 1955, when approving conference action was taken. Choirs (q.v.) are still unknown in the Mennonite Church (MC) and related conservative groups, the emphasis being strongly on congregational singing only. Lighter Gospel hymns were introduced through revivalistic influences about the turn of the 20th century in the American churches of Swiss-South German descent, as was the case also in Switzerland and France (not in South Germany, where the chorale type hymn was retained in the Mennonite hymnals), although worship remained sober and traditional. Only rarely in the regular worship did lay members participate by prayer or testimony, and "Amens" or similar ejaculations from the congregation during the sermon were and are unknown.

In America (not in Europe) the custom of bringing even very small children along to the morning worship has been and still is widespread. Sunday school, which usually precedes the preaching service (in Europe parallel to the preaching service), provides special classes for small children, but their presence in the second service often interferes with a reverential atmosphere. Many modern meeting-houses now provide special separate rooms in the rear or in balconies for mothers with small children, with glass partitions from the main room. Church bulletins, mimeographed or printed, giving the order of service and announcements for the week, have come into use in the Mennonite Church (MC) since about 1940, but are not found in the more conservative groups.

Sunday evening services in America were not introduced until late in the 19th century or even later in the Mennonite Church (MC) (not at all in the Amish congregations). This forced the introduction of lights into the meetinghouses, which at times was the cause of much controversy. The evening service was introduced in part to provide "Young People's Meetings" (q.v.), in part to make evening services possible during the week of evangelistic meetings.

H.S.B.

Wössingen (Baden) Mennonite Church, originating about 1700, a member of the Verband (q.v.) conference, in 1959 had a membership of 49 and 17 unbaptized children, with Rudolf Funck as elder (1948) and Helmut Kreiter as preacher. The village of Wössingen lies about 10 miles east-northeast of Karlsruhe. Wössingen is one of the oldest Mennonite congregations east of the Rhine. The Swiss Mennonites who fled from their homeland in Bern and Zürich from 1650 on, first came into the Palatinate, but from about 1700 on also into the territory of the Margrave of Baden-Durlach. The tolerant Charles William (1709-18), founder of Karlsruhe, in 1715 offered religious freedom to all who would settle in the vicinity of his castle Karlsruhe. The Mennonites who came here became tenant farmers on the baronial estates where they were highly valued, and they have remained largely of this type. The descendants of the original families who settled in this neighborhood are now largely members of the Wössingen and Durlach congregations. In 1731 Wössingen appears in Ernst Müller's list of 13 Swiss congregations in the "Upper Palatinate." The Naamlijst for 1766 lists "Wesingen" as part of a congregation called "Boekschaft, Streichenberg en Wesingen," with Martin Krauter as elder, ordained 1746. It was listed further in the Naamlijst for 1786, 1793, and 1802, with Jost Glück as elder throughout, ordained preacher in 1756 and elder in 1773. In the 1857 Namensverzeichnis Heinrich Funk and Martin Funk appear as elders, ordained in 1835 and 1839 respectively, with a baptized membership of 55. In the Mannhardt Jahrbuch of 1881 the elders were listed as Philipp Schneider (1859) and Christian Funk (1872), membership 40. H.S.B.

Wostitz (Wastitz; Czech, Wostice), a market village northwest of Nikolsburg (q.v.), the seat of a Hutterite Bruderhof which was built in 1557 with the consent of Albrecht Boskowitz. In 1574-1622 the areas of Wostitz and Purschitz belonged to the dukes of Thurn-Valsassina. The archives of Liechtenstein (located in Vienna) of the years 1569 and 1571 contain a series of letters by Albrecht of Boskowitz which give special recognition to the capabilities of the Hutterian Brethren in agriculture and the crafts. They apparently built the castle in Wostitz, for Albrecht gave his official the commission to make a better proposition with the Brethren for the "new building" in Wostitz. The achievements of the Brethren at Wostitz were very highly valued, as was also their medical skill. Duke Francis Thurn took his son John Jacob Thurn, who had been injured in battle in 1583, from the hospital in Vienna to Wostitz where he could have the benefit of the healing skill of the Hutterite physician. On Sept. 24, 1583, he wrote that the Anabaptist doctor in Wostitz had successfully treated his son. He had expelled the Hutterian Brethren from Wostitz two years previously, because the Hutterite servants in the duke's family refused to serve in the merriment on the occasion of a wedding. The Chronicle reports that shortly after the Brethren had moved away the duke's wife became very ill and died after three weeks.

In 1591 the Bruderhof in Wostitz was occupied by Hutterian Brethren who had had to leave Pergen and Veitelsbrunn. In 1617 they (50 persons) were violently expelled by Duke Veit Heinrich von Thurn, with the loss of all their property. HEGE.

Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 1933; Zieglschmid, Chronik; Beck, Geschichts-Bücher; ML IV.

Woudsend, a town in the Dutch province of Friesland, the seat of a Mennonite congregation, which, according to Blaupot ten Cate, was founded in 1600-20. This congregation was called Waterlander; in the 17th century there was at Woudsend also a small Janjacobsgezinden (q.v.) church, which may have been somewhat older than the Waterlander congregation. Concerning the Janjacobsgezinden, however, there is no further information; this congregation may have dissolved by 1630. In 1695 the Waterlander church joined the Mennonite conference of Friesland (FDS), then numbering about 40 baptized members; Arjen Clasen was its preacher from 1682 until 1727. A meetinghouse erected in 1722 had some stained glass windows. It was replaced by a new church, dedicated Feb. 13, 1859.

The membership was always small: c40 in 1695, c30 in 1761, 34 in 1838, 39 in 1861, 50 in 1900, 29 in 1958. The baptism book of the congregation dates from 1682. Until 1819 the congregation was served by untrained and unsalaried preachers, chosen from their own members, of whom Uilke Johannes Stinne, serving 1769-1800, and Foeke Ymes Postma 1800-19 were the last ones. In 1819 J. Oosterbaan, educated at the Amsterdam seminary, was called to serve in Woudsend (until 1824); he was followed by H. W. Woudstra 1826-27, J. S. Bakker 1828-30, G. J. Boetje 1831-37, J. de Liefde 1837-39, P. Douwes Dekker 1839-40, P. Leendertz Wz 1840-55, J. D. van der Plaats 1856-83, S. J. Andriessen 1890-97, J. Koster 1897-1902, K. Vos 1903-11, H. G. Berg 1912-15, R. C. de Lange 1915-19. Since 1920 the pastor of neighboring Balk (q.v.) has also been the pastor of the Woudsend congregation. vdZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. II, No. 2360; Blaupot t. C., Friesland, 164, 188, 248, 306; DB 1861, 144 f.; 1895, 12; 1901, 145 f.; Naamlijst 1829, 53 f.; De Zondagsbode IV (1890-91) No. 25; XXII (1908-9) Nos. 25-27.

Wouter, a Dominican monk, as early as 1510 in Utrecht, Netherlands, sharply criticized Roman Catholic practices; he was, however, forced to recant. But again in 1517 he attacked the Catholic Church, discarded his monastic dress, and traveled through Holland preaching "the truth of the Gospel" in a number of Dutch towns. This "Lutheran monk," who fled to Strasbourg (q.v.) c1521, awakened a true evangelical spirit in many of his adherents, among whom were Cornelis Hoen (q.v.) and Guilhelmus Gnapheus (q.v.), and largely opened the way for Sacramentism (q.v.) and Anabaptism. At Delp (q.v.), where Wouter lived for a time, David Joris became his follower c1520. vdZ.

L. Knappert, Het ontstaan en de vestiging van het Protestantisme in de Nederlanden (Utrecht, 1924) 115 f., 137, 142; Kühler, Geschiedenis I, 196; Mellink, Wederdopers, 331, 334.

Wouter of Capelle, an Anabaptist martyr, was executed at Dixmuiden (q.v.) in Flanders, Belgium, in 1553. Particulars are lacking, except that Wouter was a weaver of serge. (Mart. Mir. D. 150, 795, E 539, 1086.) vdZ.

Wouter of Hondshoten, an Anabaptist martyr, was drowned at Hondshoote in Flanders, Belgium, in 1558. Particulars are lacking. (Mart. Mir. D 202, E 583.) vdZ.

Wouter Denys, an Anabaptist martyr, who was seized at Meenen in Belgium with five companions and after cruel torture burned at the stake in Courtrai on April 30, 1569. "With metal cut from a coin and with ink made of chalk" he wrote several letters, three of which are given in the Martyrs' Mirror. The first was written to his wife, admonishing her to walk in the fear of the Lord and to seek her salvation more earnestly than heretofore; the third letter, more general in character, requested the intercession of friends for the prisoners. He was a native of Courtrai (Kortrijk) and had been (re)baptized in 1569. (Mart. Mir. D 408 f., E 759-61; Verheyden, Courtrai-Bruxelles, 39, No. 27; ML IV.) NEFF.

Wouter van Stoelwijk(c)k (of Stolwijk in the Dutch province of South Holland?), an Anabaptist martyr, was burned at the stake at Brussels, Belgium, on March 24, 1541. Van Braght says he was executed at Vilvoorde, but this is a mistake. Van Braght also relates that he was arrested in 1541, but this too is wrong; he was captured on Feb. 11, 1538, and imprisoned at the castle of Vilvoorde for more than three years. Particulars are lacking. In prison Wouter wrote a long letter which was published under the title Een trostelycke Vermaninghe (n.p., 1558) and which is found in the Martyrs' Mirror. vdZ.

Mart. Mir. D. 51-61, E 455; Verheyden, Courtrai-Bruxelles, 62, No. 10; DB 1870, 51; Bibliographie I, 377 f., 669 f.

Wouter Thonisz (Thomasz), of Woerden, an Anabaptist martyr, was sentenced to death by beheading by the Court of Holland on May 16, 1534. He probably died at The Hague. Wouter was one of the Anabaptists who had sailed from Amsterdam on March 24, 1534, en route to Münster (q.v.), and were arrested at Bergklooster (q.v.). (Inv. Arch. Amst. I, No. 744 f.; DB 1917, 122, No. 149.) vdZ.

Wouter de Vries was a Mennonite preacher at Vreeland (q.v.) in the Dutch province of Utrecht c1560. Nothing more is known about him. (Inv. Arch. Amst. I, No. 402; DB 1903, 6, 19.) vdZ.

Wouters, a former Dutch Mennonite family. A Be(c)rent Wolters (Wouters) moved c1670 from Munsterland, Westphalia, Germany, to Knijpe (q.v.) in the Dutch province of Friesland, where he was converted from Catholicism and joined the Groningen Old Flemish Mennonite congregation. His son Wouter Berends, b. at Knijpe in 1671 (perhaps 1677), d. at Sneek in 1760, moved to Sneek c1693, where he opened a brush shop and soon became well-to-do. Then he bought two oil presses, a soap factory, and was the owner of boats shipping freight from Sneek as far as Rotterdam. He was a conservative Mennonite, not joining the rather liberal congregation at Sneek, but the Old Flemish church of neighboring IJlst (q.v.). In 1746, at the age of c70, he founded a Groningen Old Flemish congregation at Sneek (q.v.), which he financed and to which he gave the use of one of his warehouses on the Kleinzand, adapted into a plain meetinghouse. Of this congregation, starting with 17 baptized members, his son Andries, who took the family name of Wouters (1714-81), was a deacon from 1746 until his death. Andries Wouters, a well-to-do merchant at Sneek, was secretary of the Groningen Old Flemish Conference and was one of the delegates of this conference who in 1766 negotiated with the Zonists (q.v.) to merge the two groups; this merger, however, failed to come about. Andries Wouters was also diligent in behalf of the Mennonites in West Prussia. His brother Wybe Wouters (Sneek 1704-69) also acted as secretary of the same conference, as did his grandson Wybe Wouters (1762-1826), a bookseller and publisher at Groningen, who was the last secretary of the conference before it was dissolved in 1815. In the 19th century most members of the Wouters family held high military offices, usually leaving the Mennonite Church. Julia Wouters (Sneek 1829-Oudeschoot 1892) bequeathed her stately country house "Veenlust" at Oudeschoot, Friesland, as a home for old ladies of the higher classes, called Julia Jan Woutersstichting. vdZ.

A. Haga, "Bijdrage tot de genealogie van het Doopsgezinde Sneeksche geslacht Wouters," in De Nederlandsche Leeuw, 1941 (repr.); DB 1890, 94-100, 102-4, 108, 110; 1892, 91 f., 95, 96; Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 1112, 1714, 1721; Blaupot t. C., Friesland, 195, 224, 225; idem, Groningen I, 136, 148, 150.

Wrake, Van de, a booklet by Bernhard Rothmann (q.v.) in Münster (q.v.), entitled Eyn gantz troestlick bericht vande Wrake . . . an alle ware Israeliten unnd Bundtgeneten Christi . . . durch de gemeinte Christi tho Munster (Münster, 1534), was a writing in which the Anabaptists of Holland were summoned to abandon their peaceful attitude and to support the "kingdom of God" at Münster with weapons. Four men distributed the booklet among the Dutch Anabaptists; at Maastricht (q.v.) and elsewhere it was eagerly read. It had a baleful influence, moving many Anabaptists to take up arms and join the Münsterites. Van de Wrake was refuted by Menno Simons in Gantsch duydtlijck bewys tegens . . . Jan van Leyden. Van de Wrake was re-edited by K. W. Bouterwek in Zur Literatur und Geschichte der Wiedertäufer I (Bonn, n.d.-1864) 66-80. vdZ.

Kühler, Geschiedenis I, 129 f., 140, 146, 165; Mellink, Wederdopers, 371 ff.; DB 1884, 11, 13; 1889, 67-72; 1905, 86 f.

Wright County (Iowa) Amish Mennonite Church, now extinct, located one mile east of the Dayton Center Schoolhouse, was founded in 1893 when five families from Johnson County, Iowa, led by Solomon Swartzendruber from McPherson County, Kan., settled near Clarion, joined in the following years by more families. From the beginning church services were held the Gilette Schoolhouse in Dayton Township. In 1898 a meetinghouse was built on a plot of land donated by Joel Swartzendruber. Early in its history some contention arose over the observance of Amish traditions and practices and later over the use of the German language in church services. In the spring of 1901 Solomon Swartzendruber and his brother-in-law John Gunden moved away from the colony. The remaining members tried to maintain their church life, but unrest continued and more moved away. In 1911 the last families left the community and a promising congregation in one of the finest farming communities in the United States became extinct. A few years later the church building was dismantled and rebuilt in Daytonville, Iowa, for the Daytonville Mission. Later it was sold. The cemetery, which contained the remains of some half-dozen members of the congregation or their children, was discontinued in 1941, when the bodies were exhumed and shipped to the settlements where the former residents of this church now live, and laid away in the family burial plots. S.C.Y.

Wucherer, Hans, an Anabaptist martyr who, after brutal torture, was burned at the stake at Burkhause, Bavaria, in 1537 together with Hans Bartel (q.v.), who is also known as Bärtel Synbeck, a weaver of Kaufbeuren. In prison he wrote a moving letter to his wife, which is reprinted in the Hutterite Chronicle, bidding her farewell and admonishing her "to remain true to the brotherhood and to God." (Zieglschmid, Chronik, 185 f.; Mart. Mir. D 41, where the name is Woekeraar, E 447; ML IV.)

NEFF.

Wuite, a Dutch Mennonite family, originally at Giethoorn (q.v.), Dutch province of Overijssel, where Harm Roelofs (Wuite) was a Mennonite preacher in the Giethoorn-Zuid congregation 1739-d. 92. His son Roelof Harms Wuite was a preacher of the same church 1783-d. 93. Roelof Roelofs Wuite moved c1830 from Giethoorn to Tjalleberd (q.v.) in Friesland, where he engaged in peat-digging and later in farming. His cousins(?) Jacob Jansz Wuite and Jan Jansz Wuite settled about the same time as farmers on the neighboring hamlet of Luinjeberd. Jan Jacobs Wuite (1845-1908), a son of the above Jacob Jansz Wuite, was for 35 years a trustee of the Tjalleberd congregation. His son was Jan Wuite (Luinjeberd, May 2, 1874-Haarlem, July 5, 1931), who after studying at the university and the Mennonite seminary of Amsterdam served as pastor at Stadskanaal 1898-1904, Drachten-Ureterp 1904-12, Leiden 1912-25, and Bovenkniipe 1925-30. He was editor of De Zondagsbode (q.v.) from 1916 until November 1930, and of the Doopsgezind Jaarboekje (q.v.) 1927-30. He published a paper, "De Scheurin tusschen het Lam en de Zon," in DB 1900, and in DB 1904 a Dutch translation of S. Cramer's article on Menno Simons from Herzog's Realencyclopädie XII under the new title "Menno's Leven." In DJ 1914 he commemorated his professor Samuel Cramer (q.v.). An address of his, "De taak van de predikant in onze gemeente," given before the ANDPV (Dutch Mennonite ministers' association), was published in DJ 1928. Gods Wegen, godsdientige schetsen (Schagen n.d.-1933,) came from the press after his death.

Geert Wuite Janszoon (Luinjeberd, July 16, 1874-

The Hague, Feb. 21, 1940) also studied theology at the university and the Amsterdam seminary and served as pastor of the Mennonite congregations at Staveren-Molkwerum 1899-1902, Arnhem 1902-10, and The Hague 1910-39. Particularly at The Hague he was a popular preacher and an influential leader of the church. The Wuite House of the congregation at The Hague is named after him. He was a trustee of the A.D.S. 1931-39. He published a number of sermons, and a volume of sermons entitled Soli Deo Gloria (Busonn, 1939) was published when he retired. His son Jan Johan Gerard Wuite (b. at Staveren 1900) after studying at Leiden and Amsterdam was a pastor at Veendam 1927-32, Zaandam-Oost 1932-34, and Utrecht 1934-. He was a trustee of the A.D.S. 1933-34 and 1943-, and a curator of its seminary 1946-, acting as its moderator 1955-.

Many members of this family have served as deacons at Giethoorn, Tjalleberd, Zwolle, Leeuwarden, Amsterdam, and The Hague. vdZ.

Naamlijst 1793, 63; DB 1878, 23; DJ 1919, 66, 68, 71, 72; 1928, 96; 1932, 23-37; 1941, 17-24; De Zondagsbode XXII (1908-9) Nos. 8, 10; XLIV (1930-31) Nos. 37 f.

Wullenwewer, Jürgen (1492-1537), a Hanseatic statesman, a native of Hamburg, was elected as a member of the council of Lübeck in 1533, and 14 days later as mayor. He strove to re-establish the political supremacy of Lübeck on the Baltic Sea; but after the Danish victory in the Battle of Assens (June 11, 1535), when the rule of the democracy in Lübeck collapsed, Wullenwewer resigned in August 1535, but continued to be interested in Nordic politics. The Lutheran superintendent Bonnuns demanded Wullenwewer's expulsion on the ground of his supposed intention of introducing Anabaptism in Lübeck; Wullenwewer was accordingly arrested in November 1535 and consigned to the zealous Catholic Duke Henry the Younger. Under torture Wullenwewer "confessed" that he had had connections with the Anabaptists. How far these "confessions," which are still extant, correspond with reality must be the subject of further investigation. He was sentenced to death and beheaded on Sept. 29, 1537. Wullenwewer's fate has been treated by Köhler in a novel and by Gotzkow and Heinrich Kruse in dramas. HEGE.

Heinrich Handelmann, Die letzten Zeiten hansischer Uebermacht im Skandinavischen Norden (Kiel, 1853); Caspar Paludan-Müller, Grevens Feide I and II (Copenhagen, 1853-54); Georg Waitz, Lübeck unter Jürgen Wullenwewer und die europäische Politik (3 vv., Berlin, 1855-56); K. Kupisch in Furche No. 24, 1938, presents a brief sketch of Jürgen Wullenwewer, seeing tragedy in the entanglement of religion and politics; J. Wipf, Ref.-Gesch. der Stadt und Landschaft Schaffhausen (Zürich and Leipzig, 1929) 175 f.; W. Stolze, "Ueber die Bedeutung des Bauernkrieges für die deutsche Geschichte," in Ztscht für Kirchengesch. XLIX (1930) 189-97; ML IV.

Wunderl, Johann: see Bünderlin, Hans.

Württemberg, one of the larger states of Germany (1939, 7,532 sq. mi., and pop. 2,896,820), is located between Baden and Bavaria. (Since 1945 it is united with Baden into one political unit.) Württemberg is composed of the former duchy of Württemberg, the gravures of Hohenberg, Hohenlohe, Limpurg, Löwenstein, part of the margravure of Ansbach-Bayreuth, the Landvogtei of Swabia, the realm of the counts of Thurn and Taxis, 18 imperial cities, and numerous knightly estates and monasteries. In the time of the Reformation these were still independent. After the time of Napoleon, that is, after 1801, the Mennonites of all Württemberg are included here.

(1) The Duchy. In 1520-34 it was under the domination of Austria, since the Swabian League had expelled Duke Ulrich because of a murder and had sold the country to Austria. The Anabaptists had been active here since the execution of Michael Sattler (q.v.) in May 1527. The government had become attentive to this movement proceeding from Horb and Rottenberg, and from Esslingen and Gmünd. On Jan. 26, 1528, King Ferdinand gave orders to the Württemberg government as to procedure with the Anabaptists. The Anabaptists were classed with murderers, arsonists, and vagabonds. The provost of the Swabian League, Berthold Aichelin, also carried on his nefarious work in this duchy and here came to an infamous end. The trial of Augustin Bader (q.v.) took place in Stuttgart. With his execution the very small chiliastic revolutionary group in Württemberg had come to an end. But the regular peaceful Anabaptists were active here continuously from 1526. The Hutterian Brethren also were active and sent emissaries from Moravia, who won more and more new followers in this country which had meanwhile been subject to a famine. The Swiss Brethren found the greatest response. After Michael Sattler had gathered these quiet Anabaptists, who were entirely bent upon living a holy life quite in accord with the Scripture like the first Anabaptists in Zürich, this group established itself firmly in Württemberg. Not until the Thirty Years' War did this type of Anabaptism die out. The Anabaptist striving for sanctification, however, continued later in Pietism which was connected with the established church.

The Anabaptist literature was feared. All booksellers' wares were checked. The Anabaptists were not only accused of murder and arson but they were also blamed for the increase in divorces. Indeed, continuance of marriage with an unbeliever was a very serious question for an Anabaptist.

The Austrian government condemned Aichelin's brutal proceedings and tried to hold strictly to legal process. But this process provided for capital punishment for Anabaptists. The Swabian spirit rebelled against such measures. Even though the government might have the imperial mandates solemnly read in the churches, an effort was still made to convert the Anabaptists by having preachers and university professors debate with them. Only the most obstinate were punished with death. A Hutterite martyr catalog of 1531 names 55 from Württemberg out of a total of 410. A later catalog of 1581 counts 67 from Württemberg among a total of 2,169 blood witnesses. But these figures are not exact. There were more victims in Württemberg than these, since it has been shown that there are more places in which capital punishment was applied than those named in these sketches.

When Duke Ulrich returned to his country in 1534-50, Anabaptist executions ceased. To be sure, the Strasbourg Reformers Capito (q.v.) and Bucer (q.v.) warned the Duke against the Anabaptists and against Schwenckfeld (q.v.). In the Peace of Kaaden (q.v.) Ulrich obligated himself to punish them. But the treatment grew more lenient. On June 18, 1535, Ulrich's first Anabaptist mandate concerning the treatment of recanting Anabaptists was published. These recanters were to give up all connections with Anabaptists and to obey the government in all things, hence also to attend the established religious services and communion; "corner preachers" traveling through were to be reported like vagabonds; backsliders were to be punished with death. At first the horror of the events in Münster in 1534-35 affected the Duke's judgment. But after its fall Ulrich sought advice of the jurists at the University of Tübingen. Their answer of June 9, 1536, to be sure, pointed to the imperial law requiring the death of such Anabaptists, but it recommended lenience. The theologians advised lenience because these simple people "see in these mild spirits such a fine appearance of life and, on the other hand, with us and the great crowd of our people unfortunately such a wild, bold, and degraded life." The death penalty, they said, would deprive the victim of the possibility of conversion. Arrest would prevent infection and would give opportunity for a change of mind. Expulsion from the country, they said, is unbrotherly since in that way ruin goes to the other countries. Here they were expressing the ideas of Johannes Brenz, the Reformer of Nürnberg.

The ducal regulation of 1536 emanates from these views of the theologians and jurists. Anabaptists were arrested and under the threat of the rack were questioned (1) regarding any possible participation in the Peasants' War; (2) concerning the time, place, participants, leaders, and the reason of Anabaptism; (3) concerning infant baptism, communion, the oath, the Christian character of the government, and participation in war; (4) concerning the restoration of all things, concerning the sonship of Christ and His sufficient atonement; (5) concerning possible recantation. If they recanted they had to give up all Anabaptist living and under oath vow obedience to the temporal and to the spiritual authorities. Backsliding would be punished by death. The leaders were questioned more strictly, probably under torture, concerning their adherents, their peculiar doctrine, whether they had anything to do with Münster or Moravia, concerning their signs of recognition, whether they had any plans for violence. The authorities feared the overthrow of all social order. As a punishment banishment was provided as well as confiscation of property, and death in the case of illegal return. Skilled clergymen were engaged to instruct the prisoners.

An Anabaptist by the name of Hans Fritz of Dettingen said in 1565 that he had previously been questioned by Erhard Schnepf and others but that he had been permitted to keep his faith. Proceedings were thus apparently not violent.

The Anabaptists preferably stayed near the state borders. They held their meetings in secluded places. Popular with them was the song written by Jörg Wagner, who was burned at the stake at Munich in 1527. They recognized each other by the greeting, "The grace of the Lord be with us all."

A number of noblemen gave them protection and lodging in their villages; for example, the Weittershausens at Bromberg near Hohenhaslach, the Nippenburgs in Schwieberdingen and Hemmingen, the Thumbs in Köngen and Stetten. The Anabaptist economic capability and honesty stood them in good stead. Their nonresistance made them adaptable.

The interim government of Charles V brought the Anabaptists a certain lessening of danger; the attention of the authorities was diverted. Since the Moravian Landtag of 1547 decided not to tolerate more than 5 to 7 persons living in one house, the Bruderhofs of the Hutterian Brethren had consequently become impossible there, and some of them returned to their old homes. A more careful distinction was now made in Württemberg between the Hutterian Brethren, the Swiss Brethren, and the Schwenckfelders. The earnestness of the Anabaptists was recognized; but the fear of possible revolutionary efforts continued for a long time and accounts for Ulrich's serious doubts even about the peaceful Anabaptists.

Under Duke Christoph, 1550-68, the Anabaptist movement increased, probably in consequence of the work of the Hutterian Brethren in the country. The Treaty of Passau gave the Duke a free hand. In 1553 the church inspection regulation stipulated that the superintendents and the church councils should consult together four times a year concerning the Anabaptists and the Schwenckfelders. Thus the Württemberg synod owes its creation to the struggle with the "sects." On June 14, 1554, an order was issued not only against "Kaspar Schwenckfeld's own accursed person," but also against the Anabaptists. Jacob Andreae (q.v.) no doubt incited the Duke to this measure; he had had to deal with Anabaptists from Stauffen in his parish at Göppingen. The order required church attendance, forbade all meetings of Anabaptists, and required immediate reports about everything. The trial in 1557 of the Rapp brothers reveals the Duke's zeal for pure doctrine. Brenz and the court chaplain Bidembach took the greatest pains to convert the two brothers. With the younger one they succeeded, but the older one remained stiff-necked and was expelled from the country. At the disputation at Pfeddersheim on Aug. 24, 1557, Andreae won to his side the magistrate (Vogt) of Alzey who had favored the Anabaptists.

In Worms Brenz and Andreae in 1557 took part in composing the Prozess (q.v.) wie es soll gehalten werden mit den Wiedertäufern. Brenz was a signatory. But it is somewhat remarkable that the recommendation of the death penalty and the reference to Servetus' execution is crossed out. Who did this can no longer be ascertained, whether Brenz or the Duke. But the crossing is clear evidence of the strong feeling in Württemberg against the shedding of blood in spite of Lev. 24:16, "He that blasphemeth . . . shall surely be put to death."

On June 25, 1558, Duke Christoph issued the mandate that remained authoritative for dealing with all sectarians, including the Anabaptists. It gives the exact questions by which the Anabaptists were to be cross-examined. If the leaders did not give adequate answers they were to be tortured. Repentant ones were to recant before the assembled congregation. Obstinate ones were to be kept in prison. Property confiscated from the Anabaptists was to be used for the expenses of the prisoners and for their innocent dependents. One of the questions asked was whether a Christian may dismiss his wife for confessional reasons, and how many wives one may have.

The Duke's zeal induced the people of Esslingen on July 5, 1562, to arrest some Swiss Brethren who were at a meeting in the Heinbachtal and to examine them. The prisoners were all from Württemberg. They were dismissed after a few weeks upon their promise to avoid the city. In 1563 an Anabaptist, Barbara Löffler of Stuttgart, was branded because she had backslidden into Anabaptism. In 1557 began the 19-year imprisonment of the Hutterite Paul Glock in Hohenwittlingen.

The verdict of popular opinion concerning the Duke's zeal to preserve the pure doctrine was, "The pope compelled us to attend communion with the ban, but you with the tower [prison]," as an Anabaptist said in 1565. Everywhere the Anabaptists sought earnestly for sanctification. In 1569 an Anabaptist exile wrote to the government: "It gave me offense to see that so many go to the Lord's Supper heedlessly out of old habit; they are this year like last year and last year like this year and I have not seen any change in them nor any laying aside of the old Adam."

The Lutheran state church was established under Duke Christoph. Brenz's idea that heretics should be attacked only with the Word disappeared. In 1557 Andreae still preached his 33 sermons against all sectarians including the Anabaptists, but without success. Nevertheless for the sake of their clarity they are worth reading.

The bad life of many an official under Duke Louis, 1568-93, and a number of famines induced many Württembergers to follow the call to Moravia as the promised land of all Anabaptists. Twice a year their missionaries appeared in the country. But the Swiss Brethren were also at work, though very quietly. The period of the developing Formula of Concord, to which Jacob Andreae was giving his attention, was a time of strong increase of Anabaptism in Moravia as well as in Württemberg. The tone of the records becomes harder. A marginal note, "Just deal harshly with this little rabble of rogues," may have come from the Duke. The Anabaptist leaders are now called "work devils" and their preaching a "chattering." The Anabaptist regulation was revised and expanded in 1570-71. A clear distinction was made now between leaders and the simple Anabaptists. The rack was used more frequently; the introduction of capital punishment was considered but rejected. In the period of the Duke's minority outstanding officials and theologians paid close attention to the Anabaptists. The witch trials compelled everyone everywhere to make a clear statement of faith. What was one to say about divorce for reasons of faith? How should one deal with people who secretly lodged their Anabaptist relatives? Should one leave Anabaptist wives in the country or expel them if their families remained true to the church? What should one do with children of Anabaptists? Should they be baptized and taken from their parents, or should they be permitted to leave the country with their parents? What should become of the lords who have taken Anabaptists on their estates? A number of questions had to be discussed and newly regulated. In 1584 the regulation was again reviewed and sharpened.

The theologians expressed themselves as opposed to the death penalty which had been advised by the jurists, Biedenbach in 1570 and more especially Lukas Osiander (q.v.) in 1584. One of Osiander's main arguments was that the Papists might likewise apply the death penalty against Protestants if one used it against Anabaptists. The Duke decided to wait and to follow the milder way. The numerous church inspections occurring twice annually after 1573 brought much difficulty and annoyance but little success. When an Anabaptist escaped out of the country there was occasionally a note in the margin of the records, "Is probably outside." If the inspection brought an Anabaptist to the preaching or communion service, a "thank God" shows the mind of the church council. Often, however, one reads: "One must commit it to God."

Duke Frederick, 1593-1608, who was always in need of money, had the land procurator Esslinger ascertain the exact amount of the Anabaptist estates, and rent them out. The proceeds were to go directly to the Duke instead of to the church treasury. He wanted to use the money for the church in his newly founded Freudenstadt. Thus the question of faith became one of finances. The most dubious thing was that even the young theologians began to occupy themselves with the books of the Anabaptists. Menno's Foundation Book and the hymns of the Swiss Brethren were found among them now and then.

The property of the Anabaptists was reckoned after 1604 at some 55,293 guilders. In 1630 there were still 24,000 guilders. After this there is no official estimate concerning the Anabaptists and their property.

In the Thirty Years' War the Anabaptists finally died out in Württemberg. Individual Anabaptists found there later were only temporarily in the country.

The Anabaptists of Württemberg were usually peasants and vinedressers. But occasionally there were also other vocations represented among them, particularly physicians. For example, Jörg Wernlin (q.v.) called Scherer, who died c1559 in Kirchenkirnberg and is often named as a zealous leader of the Swiss Brethren, remained in the country for a long time; he had once vainly sought connections with the Hutterian Brethren in Moravia. Indeed, even a Lutheran deacon, M. Johann Walch (q.v.), had to be dismissed in 1582, who at first emigrated to Moravia, but later went to Strasbourg and from there kept in contact with the Swiss Brethren in Württemberg.

According to the Anabaptist census of Dec. 4, 1570, there were 129 Anabaptists in the duchy; in the district of Lorch alone there were 109. In official circles the number of stiff-necked ones was reckoned at at least 100, who were to be kept in permanent imprisonment and which would cause an expense of 5,000 guilders annually.

In Moravia many "Swabians" (Anabaptists who stemmed from Württemberg) occupied outstanding positions among the Hutterian Brethren. Among their bishops was Sebastian Dietrich of Markgröningen, a widely renowned physician, 1611-19. His successors, Ulrich Jaussling (Jaussle, Jausel) 1619-21, Valentin Winter 1622-31, and Heinrich Hartman 1631-39, were probably also Swabians. Andreas Ehrenpreis 1639-62, stemmed from Illingen. He was the object of a written attack by the Stuttgart provost Melchior Nicolai in 1650. His successor, Johann Rieger (Rinker, Rükker), 1662-87, was probably from Hohenstaufen. He was replaced by Johann Milter, 1687-88, of Dettingen near Kirchheim; then followed Caspar Eglauch of Bartenbach 1688-93; Tobias Bertsch 1694-1701 was from the Maulbronn district; Zacharias Walter, the grandson of the founder of the Anabaptist settlement in Alwinz in Transylvania, who had come from Oetisheim, was their last bishop, 1746-61. Also among the Hutterite preachers and managers there was a series of Swabians—Hasel (q.v.), Glock (q.v.), Binder, Hans Schmidt, and Wernlin (q.v.).

By 1570 the various forms of Anabaptism were well recognized in Württemberg; distinctions were made between the Hutterites, the Moserites, the Hofer Brethren, in contradistinction to the Davidjorists, the Münsterites, and the followers of Servetus. The Hofer group were an offshoot of the Hutterites; the Moser group must have been Swiss Brethren. The difference between the Hutterites and the Swiss Brethren lay not only in the question of private or communal property but also in doctrine. But in common to both was the striving for holiness, which always made an impression on the churchmen. One found among them, the "poor erroneous but not bad-hearted people, a great, ardent, but unintelligent zeal," whereas the people of the Black Forest thought: "He who does not carry a sword and leads an inoffensive life is an Anabaptist." In 1574 it was said in Rosenfeld, "If one does not curse or go into the tavern, one is an Anabaptist." The magistrates, however, said from their experience that they had never yet heard of a Hutterite who had denied his faith. Life and doctrine were in their case integrated, as was said in Gündelbach. The Junker of Hemmingen had an Anabaptist buried honorably in the cemetery, saying that he considered him a saved man; if he were to die today or tomorrow he would not want to get into any other heaven but the one into which this Anabaptist had gone. Such voices testify to the impression made by the quiet walk of the Swiss Brethren as well as by the steadfastness of the Hutterian Brethren. The Anabaptists differed sharply from Schwenckfeld, as is clearly shown in the dispute between Schwenckfeld and Pilgram Marpeck, but a quiet life and striving for holiness was characteristic of both groups. Conspicuous in the Anabaptist testimonies is the frequent use of the fourth book of Ezra (q.v.) and the preference for the Epistle of James. Besides their greeting, another common point of distinction was their homemade, simple clothing.

After 1571 obstinate Anabaptist women were forged to chains. A church funeral was denied Anabaptists, and many were branded. The leaders were often held in prison for many years. Paul Glock was released only because the Duke pardoned him for his outstanding work in extinguishing a fire.

The same villages in which Anabaptists had once appeared later had a great inclination to Pietism. The church managed to keep the latter in the church, especially through the influence of J. A. Bengel in the Pietist Edict of 1743, since the leaders recognized that these Pietists were striving for quiet conduct, for holiness, and for edification; indeed the church often won them as energetic promoters of the church life. This it had failed to do in the case of the Anabaptists.

A part of the Anabaptists in South Germany, the immediate followers of Pilgram Marpeck and Leupold Scharnschlager, c1530-55, seem to have formed a group somewhat distinct from the Swiss Brethren, although the differences were not great. They were sometimes called "Pilgramites." J. J. Kiwiet considers this group to have originated as followers of Hans Denk (q.v.) and Hans Hut (q.v.), rather than Michael Sattler and his associates, and thus to have had a distinct origin from the Swiss Brethren proper. (See Kiwiet's Pilgram Marpeck and the article Marpeck.) He holds that Marpeck succeeded in bringing together his group and the Swiss Brethren by about 1555, as well as the remnants of the Hofmannites. No doubt there were Pilgramites in Württemberg, although TA Württemberg contains no references to this group, and the only group name that appears in the official records is Swiss Brethren.

(II) Württemberg after 1801. In 1763-65 Mennonites are named in Bonfeld and Fünfelf in (what was later) northwestern Württemberg as renters on the Gemmingen estates: Heinrich Beer and Jakob Ebe. These villages were then not yet politically a part of Württemberg. In 1801 Duke Frederick granted the Mennonite renters of the estate of Lautenbach near Neckarsulm, after it had become a part of Württemberg, the privilege to take over in lease some of the estates in his land. In return they were to pay a fee for protection. They could not acquire the right of citizenship but they received the right to hold worship in their homes and complete toleration of their religious opinions and their religious usages as far as to instruct their children in their religious concepts. A vow was permitted to take the place of the oath. In accord with the decree of the minister of justice of April 30, 1845, the formula of affirmation for the Mennonites read: "With a solemn reference to Matthew 5:37 I assure the government instituted by God, that in the matter in which I am being heard in a legal matter I will tell all that is known to me about it in a pure, unfalsified truth, and will conceal nothing, with 'yes,' " which words were to be fortified by a hand-clasp of the one obligated to the oath.

According to the decree of June 20, 1807, the Mennonites were to be tolerated and permitted to stay in that kingdom as long as they behaved well; but they should by no means be granted the right of citizenship if they would not personally serve in the army.

According to the regulation of military conscription of August 20, Section 13, the Mennonites could choose to pay a certain amount of redemption money in place of military service. On Feb. 18, 1810, King Frederick commanded that the funds of the Anabaptists who were subject to military duty should be treated like the funds of the Jews.

With the introduction of general military duty the right of exemption by redemption payment ended. On the basis of the standardization of the Württemberg military service regulations with those of Prussia in the formation of an imperial army, the Prussian Order of Cabinet of Jan. 31, 1868, was authoritative also for the Mennonites in Württemberg. It specified that Mennonites subject to military duty could render noncombatant service in the hospital corps, or as secretaries in the army, as well as craftsmen and with the transportation corps.

The first Mennonites came to Württemberg about 1801. Soon after some came as renters on the estates of the Imperial Knights which had passed to the realm of Württemberg, such as Willenbach, Hösseleinschhof, Seehof, Sülzhof near Neckarsulm, Breitenau near Weinsberg, Liebenstein near Besigheim, Mühlhausen near Cannstadt. Some of these estates are now leased to sugar factories and therefore the Mennonites have disappeared from them. But many are still living on estates scattered largely in the northern half of the country and are highly valued for their farming capability. Lautenbach, Willenbach, Liebenstein, Breitenau are among those still or again in Mennonite hands. Others have moved to the cities and have opened businesses or have adopted other vocations. The Lichdi chain of grocery stores is owned and operated by a Mennonite preacher, with office in Heilbronn. According to the census of 1868 Mennonites in Württemberg were distributed as follows:

Name of Township (Oberamt)	Male	Female
Brackenheim	9	3
Neckarsulm	27	24
Vaihingen (Rieth)	8	11
Elsewhere	4	11
Total for the Neckar district	48	49
		Total 97
Künzelsau	32	23
Mergentheim	4	5
Oehringen	2	2
Elsewhere	11	6
Total in the Jagst district	49	36
		Total 85

There were therefore in Württemberg 182, of whom 141 were adults.

In the later census lists the Mennonites are often grouped together with the Baptists and other religious parties under the heading "Of other confession," so that it is impossible to set up a list of places where the Mennonites of Württemberg lived as can be done for Baden and Bavaria. But the total Mennonite population in 1905 was 272, and in 1925 was 729, a remarkable growth. Of the 729 in 1925, 173 were in cities of over 10,000 population; 37 in cities over 5,000 population, a total of 210 in the cities; the other 519 were in the country. In agriculture there were 282, in crafts and industry 83, in trade and transportation 56, in offices and schools 44, in the public health and welfare departments 22, in domestic service 13, and with unnamed work 98. One sees how predominant agriculture was, but how more and more the Mennonites have been turning to city vocations.

Familiar names among the Mennonites in Württemberg are Baer, Fellmann, Funck, Hege, Horsch, Landes, Schmutz, and Schneider. Most of these families are engaged in agriculture.

In 1958 Württemberg had the following six congregations, all members of the Badisch-Württembergisch-Bayrisch Gemeinde-Verband (q.v.): Heilbronn (q.v., org. 1890, 120 members), Nesselbach (q.v., 1890, 28), Möckmühl (q.v., 1914, 23), Stuttgart (1933, 111), Reutlingen (1948, 53), and Backnang (1947, 292), a total of 627 baptized members. The Backnang congregation consists wholly of refugees from Poland and Russia now settled in the Sachsenweiler Siedlung at the edge of Backnang. All the other congregations consist of descendants of the original Swiss immigrant stock of 1650-1750, which first came to the Karlsruhe-Durlach and Heidelberg-Sinsheim areas (the latter formerly Palatinate). Only Heilbronn and Backnang have meetinghouses of their own; the other congregations use rented meeting rooms. (Gem.-Kal., 1959, 89 f.)

G.Bos., H.S.B.

TA Württemberg; Gustav Bossert, "Aus der nebenkirchlichen religiösen Bewegung der Reformationszeit in Württemberg (Wiedertäufer und Schwenckfelder)" in Blätter für württemberg. Kirchengesch. XXXIII (1929) 1-41; idem, "Wiedertäuferbischöfe aus Württemberg und Schwaben ausserhalb Schwabens," in Schwäbischer Merkur, June 9, 1930, and Feb. 8, 1923; Reyscher, Sammlung der württembergischen Gesetze IX, 101; Stälin, Die Rechtsverhältnisse der religiösen Gemeinschaften und fremden Religionsverwandten in Württemberg, in Württemberg. Jahrb. für Statistik u. Landeskunde (1868) 214; Ztscht für Gesch. des Oberrheins 1914, 57; Julius Rauscher, Württembergische Reformationsgeschichte (Stuttgart, 1934); Karl Grüneisen, "Abriss einer Geschichte der religiösen Gemeinschaften in Württemberg mit besonderer Rücksicht," Ztscht f.d. hist. Theol. (1841) 63-142, which also appeared as Geschichte der neuen Taufgesinnten in Württemberg, and was translated into Dutch as Mennonieten en Doopsgezinden in Württemberg (Amsterdam, 1848); Hans Hillerbrand, Die politische Ethik des oberdeutschen Täuferturns (Gütersloh, 1959); H. W. Schraepfer, Die rechtliche Behandlung der Täufer in der deutschen Schweiz, Südwestdeutschland und Hessen (Weierhof and Tübingen, 1957); Eberhard Teufel, "Die Beschlagnahme und Verwaltung des Täufergutes durch den Fiskus im Herzogtum Württemberg im 16. und 17. Jahrhundert," Theologische Zeitschrift (Basel) VIII (1952) 296-304; Jan J. Kiewit, Pilgram Marbeck (Kassel, 1957); Christian Schmutz, "Die Mennonitengemeinden in Baden (und Württemberg) vor 100 Jahren," Gem.-Kal. 1955, 60-68; ML IV.

Würtzlburger (Wirtzlburger, Wiesslburger, Wieslberger), Augustin, a schoolteacher of Regensburg, Bavaria, born at Würzelburg near Landshut, an Anabaptist minister baptized by Leonhard Friesleben (q.v.) on Nov. 18, 1527, and thus made a member of the newly established Regensburg Anabaptist congregation. In Passion Week, 1528, a certain Hans, delegate from the Augsburg Anabaptist congregation, came to Würtzlburger with the message that the two men had been commissioned as apostles for Bavaria. Since neither wanted at first to accept the dangerous commission, they cast lots, the lot falling on Würtzlburger. The latter at once undertook his work, which was to preach, teach, and baptize. His first attempt in his home neighborhood at Würzelburg was not very fruitful, but at Süssbach near by he baptized nine. An attendant at one of his meetings here betrayed him, whereupon he was arrested, but released. Again betrayed by one of those whom he had baptized who was executed, he was again arrested on May 21, 1528, and after a five months' imprisonment in Regensburg executed on Oct. 10, 1528. The record of his three examinations in May and his "Urgicht" on the day of his death contain valuable evidence concerning the beliefs and attitudes of the early Anabaptists in Regensburg. Würtzlburger manfully confessed his faith, declaring that his religious convictions were grounded in Holy Scripture, and that he would be ready to change if he could be taught something better from Scripture. Under torture he cried out that "it was a miserable and grievous thing that they were not willing to let him stand by the truth; he wanted nothing else than to live as a true Christian." Würtzlburger's wife was also baptized. H.S.B.

Herman Nestler, Die Wiedertäuferbewegung in Regensburg (Regensburg, 1926), which prints 19 documents on the Würtzlburger case, which are also printed in TA Bayern II.

Würz (Wurz), a Hutterite family name. Joseph Würz was chosen as preacher in 1611 at Neumühl, Moravia. In 1650 Moses Würz was chosen as preacher at Sobotiste in Hungary. In 1792 Andreas Würz was chosen preacher in Russia. In 1874, when the Hutterian Brethren emigrated from Russia to America, there were among them some members of this family. The name is still found in the Bruderhofs of the United States and Canada. (Zieglschmid, Kleingeschichtsbuch, 389; ML IV.) D.D.

Würzburg. There were many Anabaptists in the bishopric of Würzburg in 1527-28. Hans Hut (q.v.) and Georg Nespitzer (q.v.) were extremely active here, but the bloodthirsty Bishop Konrad also immediately went into action against them in measures which exceeded any imaginable forms of punishment at the disposal of temporal governments. Duke Wilhelm von Hennenberg, who in spite of the Imperial Edict of April 23, 1529, did not share the attitude of the Würzburg bishop in considering Anabaptism a capital crime but punished the prisoners with more lenient measures, was therefore accused at the Imperial court. This lawsuit lasted beyond the Anabaptist period in the Würzburg area and did not come to a conclusion until about 1540. Bishop Konrad treated all "sectarians" in summary fashion. There is very little to be found in the documents of the former bishopric of Würzburg by way of records of trials, cross-examinations, or statements of imprisoned Anabaptists such as one finds in other places, but a contemporary, Lorenz Fries, reports in his Chronicle that at the beginning of 1528 four men and two women from Ipshoven were brought as prisoners to Würzburg. On February 4 the men were beheaded, the women burned at the stake, and the next day two women, a mother and daughter, were drowned in the Main River. A number recanted; many of these had a hand cut off. Others fled to Moravia, and so it is understandable that the policy of the stake which the bishop applied against the Anabaptists in his country soon cleansed his area of this "sectarianism." W.W.

Beiträge zur bayrischen Kirchengesch. XVI (1910) 170-77; Wiswedel, Bilder I, 131; ML IV.

Würzburg-Giebelstadt, a Mennonite congregation with a meeting place in the city of Würzburg (1939 pop. 107,915) in northern Bavaria, and until 1955 having a subsidiary meeting place in the town of Giebelstadt about 7 miles south of Würzburg. In 1957 it had 75 baptized members, with Johannes Schmutz as elder (1933) and Ulrich Hirschler as preacher. Before 1950 the congregation was called Giebelstadt-Würzburg. The meetings in Würzburg were begun c1927, and the congregation was really the Giebelstadt (q.v.) congregation which had its organized beginning in 1810 as the Rottenbauer congregation. H.S.B.

Wüst, Eduard (1818-59), a Lutheran pietistic evangelist in Germany and Russia, was born at Murrhardt, Württemberg, Germany, Feb. 23, 1818, the son of Johann J. Wüst, an innkeeper and baker. In 1832 he attended the Gymnasium of Stuttgart. From his early youth he was torn between study and prayer and wasting his time in bad company. In 1835 he entered the University of Tübingen. Because he could not give up associating with bad influences, his brother, a minister at Mergentheim, took him into his home after two and one-half years. A year later he returned to Tübingen to continue his studies. After this had been repeated a number of times he finally passed his theological examination in Tübingen and in the fall of 1841 became assistant pastor at Neuenkirchen. Now a complete change took place. He devoted his time to serious study and the preparation of sermons. In the fall of 1843 he became assistant in Murrhardt, where he began to associate with the Württemberg Pietists (q.v.). A succession of religious experiences deepened his convictions. In 1844 he became assistant minister at Riedenau near Backnang. By now he had developed into a fiery preacher of repentance, opposing the amusements which had done so much harm to his own life. His pietistic zeal, in opposition to some of the practices in the church, made it impossible for him to continue his service. He was dismissed, and moved to his mother's home in Stuttgart. All attempts to have him reinstated failed. He now occasionally served pietistic circles in the vicinity, whereby he met Wilhelm Nast, a Methodist minister of Cincinnati, Ohio.

For a while Wüst worked among the Pietists of Württemberg who had separated from the state church. Some of them had moved to the Ukraine in 1816-22, settling along the Berda River near the Sea of Azov and establishing the villages of Neu-hoffnung, Neuhoffnungstal, Neu-Stuttgart, and Rosenfeld. This migration to Russia was due partly to religious oppression and partly to their expectation that the second coming of the Lord was at hand, based on the teachings of Bengel and Oetinger. Neu-hoffnung extended a call to Wüst in January 1845, which he accepted. From his first to his last sermon he preached repentance and caused a revival. Soon not only his congregation, but also the neighboring churches, including Mennonites, came to listen. He introduced rigid church discipline but maintained the confidence and loyalty of his church members. Wüst's direct influence on the Mennonites was exercised in two ways. One was through addresses given at the missionary meetings at Gnadenfeld in the Molotschna. He spoke by invitation at such a meeting in 1846. Another was through his devotional addresses and Bible expositions given at the Saturday evening meetings held by the Mennonites of Berdyansk in their homes. Two preachers in the Berdyansk Mennonite congregation, Jacob Buhler and Leonhard Sudermann, were close friends of Wüst's and greatly influenced by him. Unruh (p. 29) attributes to Wüst "a mighty stimulus to new life in Mennonite circles," but states also that "opposition to the new movement was caused by his activity."

The great revival, in which the free grace of God was emphasized, caused a group of brethren to express the newly found, emotionally experienced salvation in great joy similar to the manner of the later Pentecostal groups. Kappes became the leader of this wing, which separated from Wüst in the fall of 1858. Unfortunately Wüst died at this crucial moment, on July 13, 1859. This was also the time when some of the Mennonites under his influence were promoting views which were not accepted by the elders, and caused the founding of the Mennonite Brethren Church (q.v.) and the Templer Church (q.v.). Wüst had a considerable influence in this matter, although he cannot be held responsible for all the positive and negative aspects which resulted from his work. He remained a friend of such Mennonite leaders as August Lenzmann and Cornelius Jansen. People who came in touch with Wüst either accepted his views or became his opponents. A more gentle spirit with the same positive influence might have prevented the splits which took place in the Mennonite brotherhood as a result of his preaching. C.K.

A. Kröker, Pfarrer Eduard Wüst, der grosse Erweckungsprediger in den deutschen Kolonien Südrusslands (1903); Friesen, Brüderschaft, 168-86; George Eisenach, Pietism and the Russian Germans in the United States (Berne, 1948); A. H. Unruh, Die Geschichte der Mennoniten-Brüdergemeinde (Winnipeg, 1954) 28-32; Eduard Wüst, Antritts-Predigt des Eduard Hugo Otto Wüst (Moscow, 1850); idem, Die Herzen überwältigende Liebe (Moscow, 1851); idem, Zehn Passions-Predigten (Reval, 1853).

Wüstenfelde, a village near Oldesloe in the German province of Holstein, was the place where Menno (q.v.) Simons could live and work quietly during his last years. Wüstenfelde was a territory belonging to the nobleman Bartholomeus von Ahlefeldt (q.v.), who permitted persecuted Mennonites to settle here. Menno moved to Wüstenfelde in the late summer of 1554 and died here on Jan. 31, 1561. The village was wiped out in the Thirty Years' War.

A monument to Menno Simons was erected on the presumed location of the village by the Hamburg-Altona Mennonite Church in 1906. vDZ.

Wüthrich, Peter, an Anabaptist preacher in the Emmental, Switzerland, was compelled to emigrate in accord with a regulation of the Bernese cantonal government of Feb. 11, 1711. Many of the exiles returned, including Peter Wüthrich. A regulation of Dec. 11, 1711, stipulated that the Anabaptists who returned were to be put into prison, some in chains, the others without chains and to be held there until they should die or conform to the church regulations (Ratsmanual 49, 431).

As in 1571, again six of the outstanding Anabaptist leaders were to be condemned to galley slavery (q.v.), concerning whom an Anabaptist hymn says, "They have taken six Brethren, have forged chains upon them, are sending them to the sea; may God be the captain of their souls."

These six men were to be put for safer keeping into the Titliger tower. On the next day a note was sent to the Täuferkammer (q.v.) which gave the information that on account of the feebleness of old age not more than four were found fit for galley service. These were Hans Luthi, the preacher of Schaufel Bühl, 54 years old; Nikolaus Baumgartner of Trub, 40; Peter Wüthrich of Trub, 50; and Joseph Probst of Trub, 50. A fifth man, Christian Liebe of the Palatinate, who was seized in the canton of Bern, was sent to the galleys with the others. These five men were delivered to Captain Hackbrett, who conducted them to Sicily where they were forged to the oars of a galley.

According to a letter, Baumgartner died in Turin and Hans Luthi died on the galley. Concerning the other three, one of whom was Peter Wüthrich, a letter was sent from Palermo to the Dutch Mennonites (Inv. Arch. Amst., reprinted in Müller). The Dutch Mennonites intervened and they were released in January 1716. They arrived in Neuenburg by way of Turin and Geneva in a very wretched condition. Wüthrich and Probst are said to have moved into the Bernese Jura. S.G.

S. Geiser, Die Taufgesinnten-Gemeinden (Karlsruhe, 1931); Müller, Berner Täufer; ML IV.

Wybma, Reynier Wybrands, b. 1573, d. 1645 at Amsterdam, was from about 1605 a preacher and from 1612 an elder of the Waterlander congregation of Amsterdam, where he lived from 1605. He was ordained to the eldership by Elder Lubbert Gerritsz (q.v.) on his deathbed, Jan. 17, 1612. At first Reynier Wybrands, as he is mostly called, was a glazier, later he had a business. He was engaged in many problems and quarrels of his age: in 1607-8 and again in 1618 he tried to settle the difficulties concerning Nittert Obbes (q.v.) in his Amsterdam home church, in 1634 he mediated in a conflict at Rotterdam concerning Elder Eduard Nabels (q.v.). His Memoriael, a book in which he wrote all that happened in his Amsterdam congregation, is found in the Amsterdam Archives. During his eldership the union of an Anabaptist-Brownist group of English refugees at Amsterdam (see Smyth, John) and his Waterlander congregation came about in 1615.

In the same year he carried on a correspondence with some Waterlander (also called Frisian) churches in Prussia.

Apart from an undated manuscript concerning exclusion from the Lord's table, now found in the Amsterdam Archives Reynier Wybrands wrote Catechesis, Dat is, onderwijsinghe in de Christelijcke Religie (Amsterdam, 1640; repr. 1640 and 1672 at Amsterdam). In 1626 he and his co-ministers P. A. Hesseling and Cornelis Claesz Anslo published Apologia oft Verantwoordinghe against Nittert Obbes. vDZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 663, 909; II, Nos. 834 f., 1179 f., 1198, 1200, 1203 f., 1226, 1345, 1359, 1366, 1372, 2626, 2930 f.; II, 2, Nos. 332-45, 347-49, 351, 364, 652 f., 658-63; Schijn-Maatschoen, Geschiedenis II, 494-516 (with portrait); Kühler, Geschiedenis II, passim; DB 1864, 3, 49, 51, 62 ff., 71; 1897, 87, 119; 1903, 62 ff., 79; 1906, 140-44.

Wybrandi, a Dutch Mennonite family, formerly found in Friesland, usually butter merchants, and owners of tileworks at Leeuwarden, where they lived from the 17th century. Gentius Wybrandi, b. c1735 at Leeuwarden, d. there c1810, studied at the Zonist (q.v.) seminary at Amsterdam and was a pastor at Berlikum 1761-82 and Heerenveen 1782-88, in which year he retired, devoting himself to farming and business. A side branch by marriage with the Tigler (q.v.) family is the Tigler Wybrandi family. vDZ.

Wybrands (Wijbrands), Aemilius Willem, b. Oct. 1, 1838, at Amsterdam, d. Sept. 22, 1886, at Leiden, was educated at the Athenaeum and Mennonite seminary at Amsterdam and served as pastor of the Mennonite congregations of Edam 1862-70, Hoorn 1870-82, and Leiden 1882-86. Though he died before the age of 48, he left a large number of writings, particularly dealing with medieval history and literature. Among his best works are Het kerkelijk drama in de Middeleeuwen (1861), De Dialogus Miraculorum van Ceasarius van Heisterbach (1873), and De Abdij Bloemhof te Wittewierum (1883). (N.N.B.Wb. IV, 1486 f.) vDZ.

Wybrands (Wijbrands), Christiaan Nicolaas, b. March 24, 1852, at Amsterdam, d. there Aug. 16, 1913, educated at the Amsterdam Mennonite seminary, served the congregations of Noordeind van Graft 1877-78, Edam 1878-81, IJlst 1881-84, Westzaan-Zuid 1884-86, and Enschedé 1886-98. In 1898 he retired because of his health. Particularly at Enschedé he was very active. He was the promoter of the founding of the Mennonite congregation of Gronau (q.v.), which formerly belonged to the Enschedé congregation. Through his initiative the weak Zwolsche (q.v.) Fonds (fund for the pensioning of widows of Mennonite pastors) was united in 1897 with the Fonds (q.v.) tot Ondersteuning.

Among the many publications of C. N. Wybrands are a few papers in the Doopsgezinde Bijdragen, e.g., a study on the congregation of Noordeind van Graft (1878), and one on the congregation of Edam (1887). In De Zondagsbode he published articles on the Anslo (q.v.) family (XII, Nos. 16-21), on Rembrandt (q.v.) (XIX, Nos. 35-41), and particularly on "Het Menniste Zusje" (XV, Nos. 42-52, and XVI, Nos. 1-10). Of this "Het Menniste Zusje" an enlarged and illustrated edition was published in Verslag Koninklijke Oudheidkundig Genootschap, 1913. vdZ.

K. Vos, Levensbericht van C. N. Wybrands (Leiden, 1914).

Wybrands (Wijbrands), Karel (d. 1852), a teacher at Amsterdam, married to Petronella Veerman, was the father of seven children, two of whom, Aemilius Willem and Christiaan Nicolaas, were Mennonite pastors; his daughter Karolina Petronella was married to Paulus Frans Kühler, and was the mother of Professor W. J. Kühler (q.v.); Wilhemina, married to the teacher Jan M. Vos, was the mother of Pastor Karel Vos (q.v.). vdZ.

Wybrands(z), Reynier: see Wybma, R. W.

Wybrandt Jans, of Hartwerd near Bolsward in the Dutch province of Friesland, was burned at the stake at Leeuwarden on June 28, 1530, because he held heretical views on the doctrines of the Incarnation of Christ and His two natures. Although Karel Vos thought that this had reference to the doctrine of the Incarnation as taught by Melchior Hofmann (q.v.) and later also by Menno Simons, Wybrandt Jans was probably not an Anabaptist, but a Sacramentist (q.v.). vdZ.

W. J. Kühler, Het Socinianisme in Nederland (Leiden, 1912) 28; K. Vos, "Wijbrandt Jans van Hartwerd," in Ned. Archief voor Kirkgesch., 1915, 202 ff.; DB 1899, 36, note 1; 1917, 81; ML II, 259.

Wynalda, a Mennonite family found from the 17th century in the Dutch province of Friesland. There were a number of Mennonite preachers by this name: Eilert and his son Yde Wynalda were untrained preachers at Surhuisterveen from 1750 and 1772 respectively, both of whom died in 1801-2. Tjebbe Wynalda, d. c1797 at Pingjum, was a lay preacher of the Witmarsum congregation 1750-94. Jan Evertsz Wynalda, educated at the Zonist (q.v.) seminary, served at Enkhuizen 1785-86 and Blokzijl 1786-d. 95.

Agge (Aggeus) Wynalda, b. Oct. 17, 1712, at Dokkum, d. Oct. 19, 1792, at Haarlem, received his training at the Remonstrant seminary at Amsterdam, thereupon serving at Emden c1733-36 and Haarlem 1736-d.92. In 1742 he dedicated the new Buitenpost (q.v.) meetinghouse with a sermon which was published under the title David's Liefde tot Gods Huis (Amsterdam, 1743). vdZ.

Wynands (Wynandsz, Wynants): see Wijnandsz.

Wynands (Wynantz), Willem (Wilhelm), b. March 28, 1630, at Altona, d. there Dec. 21, 1658, a son of Pieter Wynands and Perina Noë, was a preacher of the Hamburg-Altona church from June 17, 1655, until his death three years later. His sermons were published after his death, entitled LVIII Stichtelyke Predicatiën (Amsterdam, 1660). Of these sermons, 57 were composed by Wynands, and one by Barend Roelofsz, also a preacher of Hamburg, and written from memory by Wynands. This book of sermons was very popular among the more conservative Mennonites; in the Balk (q.v.) congregation it was used until the early 19th century. According to a letter of 1773, the Mennonites in America liked Wynands' sermons. David Zug translated a number of them into German, published as Predigten über höchst wichtige Gegenstände des Christenthums, with a tract by Menno Simons (Lancaster 1830; reprints Lancaster 1871, Scottdale 1926). (See also Wijnands.) vdZ.

Wyngaert, Govert and Tobias Govertsen van den: see Wijngaard, van den.

Wyntgens van Westbrouck, Philips, a weaver at Amsterdam, an Anabaptist martyr, was executed on March 10, 1533, probably at Amsterdam. His head was to be put on a stake as a deterrent example. His property was confiscated. (Grosheide, Bijdrage, 36, 50, 302.) vdZ.

Wyse (Wyss, Weis, Weiss, Weisse, Weisz, Weyss, Wise), a Swiss Mennonite name found in South Germany, France, and the United States. In 1940, nine persons with the name were members of two Mennonite congregations in South Germany, and in 1951 four in the French Mennonite Conference. Endres Weiss (q.v.), an Anabaptist martyr, was burned at the stake in 1528. The first known Weiss in the Palatinate was Hans Weiss, who had three sons, one of whom, Christian, became the ancestor of the Weiss families in Wartenberg as well as many Weiss families in America. In 1717 Hans Weyss was named in a Palatine Mennonite census list, while in 1743 Michael Weiss and Jacob Weiss were named in a similar list. These last two were listed again in 1744 as being from Osthoffen. Jacob Weis, probably a Mennonite, was among the immigrants landing in Philadelphia in 1728; one of the settlers in Upper Milford Twp., Lehigh Co., Pa., was Jacob Weisz. Among the early members of the Mennonite church in this township were George Weiss and Rudolph Weiss. The name Weiss is found in the old Hereford and Boyertown cemeteries in Berks County, Pa.

Most of the American Wyse Mennonites now live in Fulton County, Ohio, and Henry County, Iowa. Their ancestors were Peter Wyss (1800-56), whose passport is dated April 1824, and who had been a resident of Burgdorf, canton of Bern, Switzerland, and his nephew John Wyse (1821-84). In Fulton County, Ohio, Peter was one of the first ministers in the Amish Mennonite church. In the same county his son Jephtha Wyse (1838-87) was ordained as minister there in 1866. John Wyse (1821-84) was ordained deacon c1864, and his son Daniel J. Wyse (1847-1925) as minister in 1888. In 1958 five ordained members of the Wyse family were serving the Mennonite Church (MC). Olive G. Wyse has for many years been a member of the Goshen College faculty. M.G.

M. Pohl, "Geschichtliche Beiträge aus den Pfälzer Mennonitengemeinden," Gem.-Kal., 1905, 133-47, especially 145.

Wytsses, Atse: see Zijpp, van der.

Y

Yamhill County (Ore.) Old Order Amish settlement: see McMinnville O.O. Amish.

Yarrow, British Columbia, a farming village 11 miles southwest of Chilliwack, is wedged in by the Vedder Mountain to the south and the Vedder River to the north. The oldest Mennonite settlement in the Fraser Valley was founded by a non-Mennonite farmer, Chauncy Eckert, who purchased 1,640 acres of fertile land along the British Columbia Electric Railway for the Mennonites whom he admired because of their honesty and farming ability. In February 1928 the first families arrived from other parts of B.C. or the prairie provinces. After much experimentation with various crops, Yarrow specialized in raising raspberries, becoming the berry center of the province. In 1954, 1,500 tons of berries were shipped, mostly to the United States, grossing approximately $300,000. Two dozen business establishments, including a sawmill, box factory, and four berry-processing plants, serve the trading area. The General Conference and the Mennonite Brethren each have a church in the village, the latter being the largest M.B. congregation in Canada. A Bible school and a Christian high school, valued at $75,000, are operated here by the M.B. Church. The Elementary-Junior High School, valued at $200,000, founded by four M.B. churches in the district, is now owned and operated by the municipality. A privately owned home for the aged is providing a place of rest for many people who move to Yarrow because of the mild climate and the opportunities for Mennonite fellowship. The population (1955) is 2,000, of which 99 per cent are Mennonites, with an additional 2,000 Mennonites living in the immediate shopping area, extending approximately three miles east and west. I.G.N.

B. B. Wiens, "Pioneering in British Columbia," Menn. Life I (July 1945).

Yarrow Bible School, located in Yarrow, B.C., was opened in September 1930 by members of the Yarrow Mennonite Brethren Church. P. D. Loewen was engaged as the first teacher. Until 1934 the school functioned as a day or evening school, with one or two classes, but with a small enrollment. J. A. Harder assisted at intervals. A. Nachtigal continued the school in 1935-37, and J. A. Harder in 1937-41. In 1940 a four-class schedule was introduced, with four instructors, and the school became a member of the ETTA. In 1942 the school had its record enrollment of 155 students, but subsequently the attendance declined because of World War II. Other principals were C. C. Peters 1941-47, G. H. Sukkau 1947-52, and H. Warkentin 1952-55. In 1946 the Yarrow M.B. Church assumed full responsibility for the school. The presence of other schools in the province and the trend toward secular education caused the Bible School to be closed in 1955. About 135 students graduated from the four-year course. H.W.A.

Yarrow Mennonite Brethren Church, located at Chilliwack, B.C., a member of the Canadian District Conference, was organized under the leadership of P. Dyck on Feb. 3, 1929, with 94 members. The meetings were held in the public school until 1930. That year the first church building was started, but was never finished. In 1933 a building for Sunday school and Bible school classes was erected. On account of the rapid growth of the church membership, it became necessary in 1938 to dismantle the church building and erect the present enlarged building, 90 x 60 ft. In 1946 a new spacious Bible school building was constructed. The early ministers of the church were P. J. Reimer, K. A. Klassen, P. H. Neufeld, P. Duke, J. Abrahams, and J. Epp. In 1957 Harold Lenzmann was pastor, with a membership of 708. The congregation has 13 missionaries on the foreign field. J.A.HAR.

Yarrow United Mennonite Church located near Chilliwack, B.C., originally a subsidiary of the First Mennonite Church (GCM) at Sardis, was organized as an independent congregation on Oct. 25, 1938, when the present frame church was built to seat 175. The members are exclusively Mennonite immigrants from Russia and their descendants, many of whom had settled first in the prairie states. They are chiefly engaged in berry farming and dairying. Services are conducted in German. At home Low German and English are spoken. In 1957 the membership was 175. The leading minister was John J. Klassen, assisted by Isaak Penner. J.J.K.L.

Yazykovo, a Mennonite settlement located approximately 15 miles from the village of Chortitza, Russia, consisted of 6 villages, 4 of which were established in 1869: Nikolaifeld (Nikolaipol), Franzfeld (Varvarovka), Eichenfeld (Dubovka), and Adelsheim (Dolinovka); Hochfeld (Morozovo) followed. Petersdorf (Petershivka), which had been previously settled, was also a part of this settlement. The name Yazykovo was derived from the name of the nobleman from whom the land was bought. The administration of the settlement (volost) was located in Nikolaipol. The land, consisting of 19,800 acres (Friesen, p. 677, 23,300 acres), was purchased by the Chortitza settlement for 240,000 rubles and divided into 147 farms consisting of 135 acres each. An additional 2600 acres was purchased privately (Friesen). At the beginning of the century there were 440 families with a total population of 2200 (Friesen; according to D. H. Epp, Statistik, 61, the figure was lower). Soon the settlement achieved prosperity.

Being located on the edge of the larger Chortitza settlement, some of the villages suffered severely during the Revolution and civil war. In Eichenfeld in a single night 82 people were killed. Eichenfeld and Petersdorf were completely destroyed. The other villages suffered severely under the Soviets. Many were exiled. During the German occupation of the Ukraine the remaining inhabitants were taken to Germany in 1943, whence some were later returned to Russia by the Red army and others came to America (for details see articles under respective village names). Most of the inhabitants were members of the Nikolaifeld (Yazykovo) Mennonite Church (q.v.), which was a subsidiary of the Chortitza Mennonite Church. There was also a branch of the Einlage Mennonite Brethren Church (q.v.) in the villages. During the German occupation, 1941-43, Adelsheim, Hochfeld, and Nikolaifeld had churches and choirs. C.K.

ML II, 394; K. Stumm, Bericht über das Gebiet Chortitza (Berlin, 1943).

Yazykovo Mennonite Brethren Church at Yazykovo-Nikolaipol, province of Ekaterinoslav, South Russia, was organized in 1875-80 at Nikolaipol, perhaps the largest of the villages in the Mennonite settlement. Peter Peters, Cornelius Fehr, and Martin Koslowsky were the first ministers of the church. It was at first affiliated with the Einlage M.B. Church (q.v.) about 15 miles to the south, but later became an independent congregation. The later ministers were Gerhard Regehr, Peter Toews, Joh. Peters, and Johann Schellenberg. The M.B. Church at Nikolaipol after a period of struggle became well established spiritually. The Alliance movement made itself felt quite strongly, strengthening rather than impeding the spiritual life of the church. During the Russian Revolution of 1917-20 some of the villages were utterly destroyed by Machno bandits and the church probably ceased to exist. Elder Gerhard Regehr, who lived at Reinfeld near Nikolaipol, managed to escape and in 1952 lived at Seattle, Wash. Johann Schellenberg was executed by the Machno bandits during the Dubovka massacre. P.H.B.

Ybor Mennonite Mission (MC) among the Spanish-speaking people in Ybor City, Fla.: see Tampa Mennonite Mission.

Ydewons, of Langweer in the Dutch province of Friesland, a revolutionary Anabaptist, beheaded on May 11, 1534, probably at Amsterdam. (DB 1917, 121, No. 144; Mellink, Wederdopers, 245.) voZ.

Ydse Gaukes, an Anabaptist martyr, who after much torture was burned at the stake at Deventer, Netherlands, on June 16, 1571 (not July 16, as stated in Martyrs' Mirror and Mennonitisches Lexikon). He was arrested by the Spanish soldiers at Deventer on March 11, 1571, with his wife Anneken and ten other Mennonites. (For detailed information, see Anneken.) Ydse Gaukes wrote three letters from prison. His first letter, dated March 31, addressed to his brother and his friends, contains moving particulars about the tortures of the prisoners. In his second letter, undated, he sends greetings to W. and L. J. at Molkwerum (q.v.) in Friesland, where he probably came from. He was a boatman. His third letter, written only two days before his death, is a farewell letter to his brothers Bauke, Simon, and Pieter. When he wrote this letter most of his fellow prisoners had already been executed. (Mart. Mir. D 552-60, E 885-88; DB 1919, 29-37; ML II, 36). voZ.

Year Book of the General Conference of the Mennonite Brethren Church of North America was first published in 1883 and since then has been published following each convention of the General Conference, which met annually until 1909 and triennially since then. The Year Book contains the minutes, reports, and resolutions of the particular session of the Conference and a directory of ministers and church workers listed by churches. Until 1936 it was issued entirely in German. In 1939 an English synopsis of the Conference decisions was issued in addition to the Year Book. In 1943 the Year Book was issued in two editions, one German and one English. Since 1946 (November 1945) it has been issued in English with a German synopsis as part of the book. The Year Book has varied in number of pages from 16 to 224. Each district issues a yearbook after each annual district conference, containing the same information for the district as the General Conference Year Book contains for the General Conference. O.H.

Year Book of the Krimmer Mennonite Brethren Church was first published in 1905, reporting the 26th Conference Session held at the Salem K.M.B. Church, Bridgewater, S.D. The 500 copies of this first pamphlet of 8 pages, 3½ x 6 inches, were printed entirely in German by the Rundschau, Elkhart, Ind. It is published annually for the purpose of distributing information of its activities among its churches, and to preserve an official record. The pamphlet contains reports of the work carried on by the Conference during that year through its committees and its churches, as well as the recommendations and resolutions adopted by the delegates for the new year. Until 1938 it was published in German; 1939-44 it contained reports in both languages; since 1945 it has been published in English. The pamphlet has been enlarged to 85-95 pages, 5¼ x 8 inches. The Fifty-third Year Book, submitting the report of the 78th Session, was published in 1957. C.F.P.

Yearbook of the Central Conference of Mennonites, generally a 40-page issue, was first published in 1922, and appeared regularly 1922-56. Special events of the year, conference minutes and reports, and a directory of conference organizations with names and addresses of officers were the principal contents. Editors were W. H. Grubb 1922-25, H. E. Nune-maker 1926, W. B. Weaver 1927-37, and R. L. Hartzler 1938-56. R.L.H.

Yearbook of the General Conference Mennonite Church, from 1895 to 1930 published as Mennonite Yearbook and Almanac, publisher Eastern District Mennonite Conference at Quakertown, Pa., to 1924, and the General Conference Mennonite Publication Board through the Mennonite Book Concern at Berne, Ind., 1924-30. Up to 1928 it contained historical material, in addition to church statistics and the annual almanac material prepared by L. J. Heatwole, which later was discontinued in 1930. In 1895-1952 it was usually a 48-page issue (first issues 40 pp.), thereafter increasing in size because of a much enlarged statistical section, the 1958 number having 92 pages; with 1946, however, the title was changed to Handbook of Information of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America. The format has been approximately 6½ x 9 throughout its history, with minor variations. H.S.B.

Yearbooks (Jahrbücher), Mennonite, annuals published by Mennonite conferences or individuals, have been of five types: (1) almanacs (q.v.) with some popular religious, literary, educational, historical, or practical material; (2) statistical handbooks giving primarily a directory of congregations, ministers, institutions, and conference organizations and officers, with membership (and financial statistics) with or without some summary reports of the year's church occurrences and activities, sometimes combined with (1); (3) minutes of annual or other conferences (may be called yearbook even though the period covered may be several years), plus ministerial and missionary directory; (4) purely a directory of congregations with membership and ministerial listings; (5) purely literary or historical annuals. Some yearbooks are very small and some large, both in pages and format. Some are distributed free and some sell for substantial prices, and one or two have large editions. One, the Mennonite Yearbook and Directory, attempts a world-wide coverage of Mennonite ministerial lists and group membership, and has an edition of 12,000. The following list is chronological and not descriptive nor bibliographically complete. (See the articles for the more important ones as indicated by q.v.) The titles of the yearbooks have in some cases changed erratically, as well as has the scope of the coverage geographically, the type of content, size, and place of publication.

1. EUROPE—Naamlijst (q.v.) der tegenwoordig in dienst zijnde predikanten der Mennoniten in de Vereenigde Nederlande, irregularly 1731-1829; Namensverzeichnis der Aeltesten und Lehrer der mennonitischen Gemeinen in Süd-, Ost-, Westpreussen, Lithauen und Polen (q.v.), occasional, 1823, 1835, 1843, 1857, 1881; Jaarboekje voor de Doopsgezinde gemeenten in de Nederlanden (q.v.), published by Samuel Muller, occasional, 1837, 1840, 1850; Jahrbuch der Mennoniten-Gemeinden (q.v.), published by H. G. Mannhardt, twice only, 1884, 1888; Christlicher Gemeinde-Kalender (q.v.) 1892-1941, called Mennonitischer Gemeinde-Kalender 1951-, published by the South German Conference; Christlicher Familienkalender (q.v.), published in Russia by A. Kroecker and later by Raduga (q.v.) 1897-1915, 1918-19; Doopsgezind Jaarboekje (q.v.), Netherlands, 1902-42, 1949-; Mennonitisches Jahrbuch (q.v.) 1904-14, published in Russia by H. Dirks 1904-11 and D. H. Epp 1912-14.

2. NORTH AMERICA—Mennonite Family Almanac, later Family Almanac (q.v.) at Elkhart, Ind., 1870-1908, at Scottsdale, Pa., 1909-55; Familien-Kalender (q.v.) at Elkhart 1870-1908, at Scottsdale 1909-40; Christlicher Familien-Kalender (q.v.), published by David Goerz at Halstead, Kan., 1885, becoming Bundesbote-Kalender (q.v.) in 1886, published by GCM Conference 1886-1947; Mennonite Yearbook and Almanac (GCM) 1895-1930, changed to Yearbook of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America 1931-45, then to Handbook of Information of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America, 1946-; Mennonite Yearbook and Directory (q.v.) (MC), Scottsdale, 1905-8, 1913-; Yearbook of the Central Conference of Mennonites (q.v.) 1922-46; Vorwärts-Kalender (q.v.), published by the M.B. Publishing House at Hillsboro, Kan., 1925-43; Der Neue Amerikanische Kalender (q.v.) 1930-, published by J. A. Raber, Baltic, Ohio, for the Old Order Amish, containing a complete directory of Amish ministers; Yearbook, Church of God in Christ, 1945-; Mennonitisches Jahrbuch (q.v.) (GCM), 1948-, published primarily for Canadians, described as a successor to Bundesbote-Kalender, but quite different in character; Warte-Jahrbuch, published by Arnold Dyck at Steinbach, Man., 1943-44. The Ohio Amish Directory, published by Ervin Gingerich, Millersburg, Ohio, 1954-, is unique in including a complete name list of heads of families along with a congregational directory.

The remaining yearbooks to be listed are essentially conference reports, sometimes with statistics, and it is not easy to determine the year of first issue, the language formerly used, whether German or English or both, or the frequency of appearance. Nor do they always bear the same name. Those still appearing in 1958 were the following: Jahrbuch der Konferenz der Mennoniten in Canada; K.M.B. Conference Yearbook; Annual Report of the Evangelical Mennonite Brethren; Annual Report of the Conference of the Evangelical Mennonite Church; Yearbook of the General Conference, Mennonite Brethren Church of North America (q.v.), triennial, first published in 1883; Yearbook published by each of the M.B. district conferences, containing besides conference proceedings a directory of congregations and ministers. The M.B.C. and U.M.C. general conference proceedings and district conference proceedings were also published as yearbooks containing much statistical material, often called Conference Journal or Proceedings of the Conference. The U.M.C. has published an annual United Missionary Church Yearbook at Kitchener, Ont., 1946-.

H.S.B.

J. C. Wenger, "Mennonite Yearbooks," MQR XIV (1940) 59-63; Melvin Gingerich and H. S. Bender, "Mennonite Yearbooks and Almanacs," MQR XXIV (1950).

Yellow Creek Mennonite (MC) Church, located in Harrison Twp., Elkhart Co., Ind., is a member of the Indiana-Michigan Conference. The first meetinghouse used by the settlers who began coming into the area in 1845, led by the aged Bishop Martin Hoover (c1761-1850) of Medina County, Ohio, was a log building one-half mile north of the village of South West, a short distance south of the present Yellow Creek Church of the Brethren. In 1849 the Yellow Creek Mennonites built a log meetinghouse 26 feet square on the plot where the old cemetery now is located on the east side of the road. This was later enlarged. In 1861 Andrew and Lydia Bigler sold two acres to the "Old Mennonite Church" for $200.00. This is the site of the present Wisler meetinghouse across the road from the 1849 meetinghouse. On this lot the congregation built a frame meetinghouse 40 x 60 ft. When John F. Funk (q.v.) attended the annual fall conference at Yellow Creek in 1862 he estimated the Elkhart County Mennonite membership at 400-500. A visitor, Deacon Frederick A. Rodes of Virginia, estimated the capacity of the meetinghouse at 500-600, but Bishop John M. Brenneman, who served as moderator of the conference, estimated the number of the communicants at 300-400. On this occasion in 1862, 46 members were baptized. After the new meetinghouse was built in 1861 the 1849 meetinghouse was moved to the northwest corner of Sec. 16 of Union Township, where it came to be known as Blossers Church and served as a sort of outpost of the Yellow Creek congregation, along with Shaums (Olive), Holdeman, and Christophels. After the Wisler division (1872) the Wisler and Funk groups alternated in the use of the Yellow Creek, Blossers, and Shaums meetinghouses. In 1907 the Wisler group split into two groups, which together bought the meetinghouse of the "Funk Congregation" (MC) at Yellow Creek in 1912. The Funk group then built the present brick meetinghouse a short distance to the north of the frame meetinghouse, and enlarged it in 1948. In 1874 the Brenneman (MBC) schism occurred when Daniel Brenneman, a progressive younger minister, was discharged, and his wing organized the Bethel Church 1½ miles northwest of the Yellow Creek meetinghouse. The membership of the Yellow Creek congregation (MC) was reported as only 80 in 1890 (J. F. Funk) and 129 in 1896 (deacon Jacob G. Long). These low figures are accounted for by the schisms of Jacob Wisler (q.v.) and Daniel Brenneman (q.v.) in 1872 and 1874 as well as by the full congregational organization of what had originally been Yellow Creek outposts: Shaums (Olive), Holdeman, Salem (merger of Blossers and Christophels), and the Prairie Street Church in Elkhart. In 1958 the membership at Yellow Creek had grown to 326, and the bishop-pastor was Peter Wiebe. Yellow Creek is the center of the large Mennonite (as contrasted with Amish Mennonite east of Goshen) settlement west of Goshen. (Files of the Herald of Truth; John F. Funk diaries and private papers.) J.C.W.

Yellow Creek Old Order and Wisler (q.v.) Mennonite meetinghouse, located slightly south of the Yellow Creek Mennonite (MC) Church (q.v.), in Elkhart County, Ind., was built in 1861, renovated about 1900, and enlarged in 1954. After the Wisler schism in 1872, the Wisler and M.C. groups alternated in the use of the building until 1912, when the M.C. congregation built its new meetinghouse. In 1907 the Wisler Mennonites divided into two groups, the more conservative Old Order or Martin Mennonites (q.v.) who do not permit telephones or automobiles, and the Wisler or Ramer Mennonites (q.v.), and these two groups now alternate in the use of the old Yellow Creek meetinghouse and the Blosser meetinghouse (built 1891). The ministers in the Ramer group, which in 1958 had 200 members, were William Ramer bishop, and Paul Hoover and Joseph E. Martin (formerly the bishop in the Martin group) preachers; the ministers in the Martin group were William G. Weaver bishop, and Enos Martin, Henry E. Martin, and Harvey Horst preachers, with a membership of 100. J.C.W.

Yenisei Province (now Krasnoyarsk Territory, Siberia), Russia, on the left bank of the Yenisei River, had a Mennonite settlement for a time. In 1913 some 32 families from the Ignatyev (q.v.) Mennonite settlement in the Ukraine established two villages, Rozovka and Krasnovka, about 40 miles south of the city of Minusinsk. During the Revolution this settlement suffered severely. In 1926 there were only 10 families left. When G. Rosenfeld and J. Pätkau visited the Mennonites here in 1927, they reported that the settlement had been dissolved because of unfavorable conditions and that the few remaining families were too poor to move elsewhere. C.K.

Jakob Quiring, Die Mundart von Chortitz in Süd-Russland (Munich, 1928) 41; Unser Blatt III (1927) 11.

Yetelhauser (Yedelhauser, Jedelhaus), Michael, a tailor of Weyl (Weil?) der Stadt in Württemberg), was imprisoned in the Upper House Prison in Passau (q.v.) with about 60 fellow believers. In September 1538, the fourth year of his imprisonment, he recanted. The record of his cross-examination says that Michael would follow the church in the expectation that the church would reform according to the word and command of God and do away with the abuses. The confession of Hans Pfeiffer (Mosheim calls him Hans Beck; this is surely an error; see ML I, 149 f.; Wiswedel I, 29) is said to have had the same general content. But since these two men did not accept the Catholic doctrine of the sacrament in one form, the ruler and administrator were unwilling to release them. But Pfeiffer and Yetelhauser escaped from prison. Mosheim, the recorder, who had taken great pains for the "conversion" of these two Anabaptists and did not agree with the administrator with respect to several "articles," was at Nürnberg a year later. Here the two Anabaptists looked him up. For that reason Mosheim was suspected of Anabaptism, and so there developed a "right spiritual struggle" between him and the Nürnberg clergy. Mosheim was apparently a wavering character who, though no longer completely in the old church, wanted to clear his name of any suspicion of Anabaptism. He declared that he had induced Yetelhauser and Pfeiffer to recant and had earnestly prayed for their release and God had heard him. Now they had come to him in Nürnberg; it would be better to listen to them in person. His suggestion was accepted. The two Anabaptists in the presence of two clergymen, two councillors, and a secretary were examined at the Rathaus. "The people of Nürnberg found pleasure in the confession of the two," comments Mosheim in his document.

Michael Yetelhauser answered the question how man is justified before God and saved: "Alone through the recognition that Christ died for us, has paid the price of sin, and done satisfaction, and thus the heart of man is struck and illuminated to such an extent through the power of God that he recognizes such a kindness which has happened in his favor, and is sincerely happy and comforted."

In reply to the question whether works have nothing to do with this justification he declared: "He who has a true Christian faith must also do Christian good works; such good works cannot be separated from the faith. However, justification and salvation are not ascribed to the works, but alone to faith. For that which Christ acquired for man even before he is born cannot be achieved with any work." In answer to the question whether his Brethren held the same view of justification he replied: "Yes, and he has been with them. They urgently insist on good works." Nothing is known concerning Yetelhauser's later fate. W.W.

Ruprecht von Mosheim, Eine Christliche wahrhaftige gründliche entschuldung (Kirchen-Bibliothek Neustadt, collection 447): W. Wiswedel, Bilder II, 29.

Ylst: see IJlst.

Ymuiden: see IJmuiden.

Yntema: see IJntema.

Yoder, Kan., a village (pop. c100), the center of a large Amish and Mennonite community, named after Eli M. Yoder, the son of an Old Order Amish Mennonite bishop of Maryland, who in 1870 homesteaded in Reno County, Kan., about 12 miles southeast of Hutchinson. In 1886 the Missouri Pacific R.R. Company built a track connecting Hutchinson and Wichita, which crossed the northeast corner of the Yoder farm, separating about 5 acres from the rest of the farm. On this corner plot Yoder built a general store and a post office. This was the origin of the village. In 1883 Christian Miller of Shelby County, Ill., bought a farm about 2 miles east of Yoder; in the following years other families arrived, making Yoder the center of the Amish community. Jonas D. Bontrager was chosen as preacher in 1885, and as bishop in 1887. By 1918 there were four Amish congregations with perhaps 80 to 90 families. In 1943 a naval air base established one mile west of Yoder, covering four sections of land, caused a number of Amish and Mennonite families to move away. There were in 1955 about 50 Amish families in the community, making two congregations.

On April 18, 1919, the Yoder Mennonite Church (MC) was organized with 65 charter members, almost all of Old Order Amish background, and L. O. King as pastor. In the same year a meetinghouse 40 x 60 ft. was built one mile north of Yoder, which was enlarged and remodeled in 1952. H.A.D.

Yoder (Ioder, Joder, Jodter, Jotter, Yoeder, Yother, Yothers, Yotter), a Mennonite family name of Swiss origin. The Swiss encyclopedia (Historisch-biographisches Lexikon der Schweiz) locates this "ancient family" in the village of Steffisberg on the edge of the Oberland in the canton of Bern, while another authority on Swiss families traces them to the village of Muri, nearer Bern. A history of the Emmental lists Joders among the early residents. The name Yoder evidently is derived from the Christian name "Theodore." For example, Saint Theodore, a missionary in the Swiss Alps in the Middle Ages, was abbreviated to "St. Joder." August 16 is still listed as "St. Joder's Day" in the Swiss Reformed church almanacs. Joder first appears as a family name in the canton of Bern in the 14th century. At Steffisberg the Joders began to appear in the records as early as 1529 and at Muri slightly later.

Although some of the Swiss Joders became members of the Reformed Church and eventually brought this faith with them to America, others became Anabaptists. Heini Joder was imprisoned at Basel in 1531 for spreading the Anabaptist faith. The Bern records show that other Joders became Anabaptists in the 17th century. In the same century members of the Joder family migrated to the Palatinate. Among the Palatinate estates on which Joders lived were Branchweilerhof near Neustadt and Vogelstockerhof near Annweiler. In 1717 a Mennonite Jost Jodter lived in Lachen. The Palatine Mennonite census list of 1724 names a Johannes Joder at Mussbach, while the 1738 census named a Jost Jother in Oggersheim. A Johannes Yother lived at Mussbach in 1759. The 1940 list of Mennonite family names in South Germany shows 34 Jothers in 6 congregations. In 1951, seven persons with the name Yoder, Ioder, or Jother were members in three churches of the French Mennonite Conference.

Yoders of the Reformed Church came to Pennsylvania as early as 1710, settling in Berks County. In 1742 Christian Jother, Christian Jotter, Jr., and Jacob Yoder, all apparently Amish Mennonites, arrived in Pennsylvania. There is considerable doubt that the widow Barbara Yoder, who supposedly arrived in 1714 and who is often mentioned among Amish immigrants, was actually one of the early Amish settlers in Pennsylvania. Jacob Yoder, who arrived in America in 1742, is generally referred to as "Strong Jacob Yoder," many legends having developed concerning the feats of this early Amish ancestor of a large number of Amish and Mennonite descendants. Christian Yoder, Jr., is likewise the ancestor of many Amish and Mennonites. Yoders continued to emigrate to America, some arriving in the first half of the 19th century.

From Eastern Pennsylvania the Amish Yoders migrated westward to Somerset and Mifflin counties, and from there to Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, and other midwestern and western states. A file of Yoder obituaries in Mennonite church papers (1864-1951) has the following number from these leading states: Ohio, 200; Indiana, 180; Pennsylvania, 176; Iowa, 53; Missouri, 38; Kansas, 28; Oregon, 22; and Illinois, 17. Sixteen additional states and provinces are included in this list. The family name is also widely represented among the Church of the Brethren. In 1957 the more than 180 ordained Yoders serving in Amish and Mennonite churches were represented in these groups: O.O.A. 99, M.C. 58, C.A.M. 14, Beachy Amish 11, and G.C.M. 3. Thus the Yoder family is the second most widely represented family in the ministry of the American Mennonite churches, being surpassed only by the Millers, who have 237 ordained men. These two family names are also the most numerous in the Goshen College student body. Among the Mennonite (MC) leaders have been Abner G. Yoder (q.v.), A. I. Yoder (q.v.), C. Z. Yoder (q.v.), David S. Yoder (q.v.), Edward Yoder (q.v.), John K. Yoder (q.v.), Joseph W. Yoder (q.v.), and A. B. Yoder (q.v.), long a leading elder in the M.B.C. Church. Among the better-known representatives of the family in 1958 were Allen Yoder (GCM), retired minister in the Central District Conference, his son Harry Yoder of the Bluffton College faculty, Sanford C. Yoder, president emeritus of Goshen College and former secretary of the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities as well as a bishop in the Mennonite Church (MC), Walter Yoder, former professor of music at Goshen College, Jonathan G. Yoder (MC), former medical missionary in India, Samuel A. Yoder (MC), Goshen College professor, Bishop D. A. Yoder (MC), former president of the Mennonite Board of Education, Edwin J. Yoder (MC), Mennonite bishop in Indiana, J. Otis Yoder, Eastern Mennonite College faculty member, Gideon G. Yoder, bishop and Hesston College faculty member, and bishops Ray F. Yoder in Indiana and Elmer E. Yoder, Paul Yoder, and Stephen A. Yoder of Ohio.

Contrary to the common understanding not all the Yoders are of Amish descent. Of those listed above, the following are of the Mennonite Yoders: D. A. Yoder, Paul Yoder, Stephen Yoder, R. F. Yoder, and A. B. Yoder. Yoders are still to be found in the Franconia Conference (MC) area. When the first Mennonite Yoders arrived has not been determined. M.G.

Don Yoder, "Origins of the Pennsylvania Yoders," in The Yoder Family Reunion Book (n.p., 1954); C. Z. Mast and Robert E. Simpson, Annals of the Conestoga Valley (Elverson, Pa., 1942) 267-74.

Yoder, Abner G. (1879-1942), a Mennonite (MC) bishop and leader, was born Oct. 4, 1879, in Johnson County, Iowa, the oldest son of Bishop (Conservative Amish) Gideon A. and Mattie (Miller) Yoder. His ancestors emigrated from Switzerland in 1742 and settled in Berks County, Pa. On Dec. 4, 1902, he married Mary G. Gingerich. There were four children: Edwin, Oren, and Katie of Parnell, Iowa, and Gideon of Hesston, Kan. In his early twenties he became a member of the West Union congregation. In 1906 he became the first superintendent of the Daytonville mission Sunday school.

On May 2, 1909, he was ordained to the office of deacon and commissioned to preach in the West Union congregation. On Dec. 21, 1924, he was chosen bishop, continuing in office until death. He served in the church in many different channels. In addition to local service he took an active part in evangelistic work. For many years he was chairman of the board of the Mennonite Children's Home at Kansas City, Kan., and treasurer of the General Sunday School Committee. He also served on various boards and committees. In 1937 he preached the General Conference sermon at Turner, Ore., and in 1939 served as moderator of General Conference at Allensville, Pa. At the time of his death he was moderator of the Iowa-Nebraska Conference as well as a member of the General Problems Committee of General Conference (MC). He died July 6, 1942.

E.Yo.

Yoder, Abraham B. (1867-1953), a leader in the United Missionary Church, was born in Elkhart County, Ind., the son of Henry B. and Elizabeth (Bixler) Yoder, taught grade school for sixteen years. He was converted at the age of twenty-three, entered the ministry in 1896, and was ordained in 1899. He married Mary M. Myers on Aug. 31, 1899. They had one child, Ray O. Yoder. He held pastorate at Shambaugh and New Market, Iowa, and at Elkhart, Bethel, Wakarusa, South West, Pleasant Hill, and Goshen in the Indiana Conference. He served as Presiding Elder in the Indiana Conference for twelve years; was delegate to a number of general conferences, and served as Chairman of General Conference in 1920. He was a member of the Board of Directors of the United Missionary Society for many years, a member of the Executive Board of the United Missionary Church, and editor of the Gospel Banner 1924-37. He died Oct. 19, 1953.†

J.A.Hu.

Yoder, Christian Z. (1845-1939), a leading Ohio Mennonite (MC) minister, a son of John K. and Lydia Zook Yoder, was born in Mifflin County, Pa., moved to Wayne County, Ohio, with his parents in 1855, and resided there until his death. He was known church-wide as "C. Z. Yoder" or simply as "C. Z." He served the Oak Grove Amish Mennonite congregation (q.v.) as deacon (1890-1904) and as minister (1904-39). At an early age he began his service to his home community. He was a successful farmer from 1865 until his retirement in 1895, and introduced new agricultural practices into the community, especially in the culture of vegetables and berries and in the use of the greenhouse. He was an organizer of the speakers at farm institutes, and a contributor to farm papers. For many years during the period when the one-room schoolhouses were being built he was a member of the township school board. At his suggestion, each received its artistic planting of pine trees. As early as 1866 he organized and led a singing school at the Center Schoolhouse, Wayne County. He helped to organize the first Sunday school in the Oak Grove church in 1871 and served as superintendent for 22 years. By the organization of the first Young People's Bible Meeting in 1889 he helped to raise the intellectual, cultural, and spiritual level of the congregation and the community. In 1890 he served as chairman of the committee which drew up and secured the adoption by the congregation of a "new order" which provided for buttons instead of hooks and eyes on men's clothing and made possible the ingathering of a large group of young people who had refused to unite with the congregation. His interest in missions, as indicated by the early missionary collections in the Sunday school and the young people's meeting, probably led to his appointment as a director of the Mennonite Evangelizing and Benevolent Board of America when that organization replaced the Mennonite Evangelizing Committee (q.v.) in 1892 in order to make room on the board for Amish Mennonites. He assisted in organizing the Ohio Mennonite Sunday School Conference (q.v.) in 1895. For many years he served as an evangelist, his preaching and singing ministry taking him to Amish and Mennonite communities in all sections of the country. Following is a partial list of the positions which he held in the Mennonite Church: 1899-1906 vice-president, Mennonite Board of Charitable Homes and Missions; 1906-11 vice-president, and 1911-20 president, Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities; 1920-28 chairman of the Missions Committee of the Board; after 1928, honorary member of the Board. He served on the Music Committee of General Conference (MC) 1909-35 and assisted in the compilation of the German and English hymnals published in 1894-1927. Never an outstanding preacher, his varied talents made a large place for him in the counsels of the church. A son John (now deceased), a grandson Howard, and a great-grandson John Howard are continuing C. Z. Yoder's interest in the life and work of the Mennonite Church. J.S.U.

Yoder, David S., a Mennonite (MC) lay leader, was born near Spruce Hill, Juniata Co., Pa., on Feb. 24, 1852, the sixth of nine children of Joseph and Hannah Sharp Yoder, of whom only four grew to adulthood. His father was a brother-in-law of Shem Zook, publisher of the German edition of the Martyrs' Mirror in 1849. His mother was the oldest sister of Solomon Z. Sharp, pioneer educator in the Church of the Brethren. He went to Academia Seminary near his home, and to Kishacoquillas Seminary not far from Belleville, Pa. He then taught in the schools of Huntingdon County.

In the late 1870's he went to Logan County, Ohio, where he taught schools near West Liberty for five years and became a member of the South Union congregation. He was married to Armenon Yoder on March 1, 1881. They had five children: Mamie M. (Mrs. J. E. Hartzler), Ruth A., John L., Nellie A., and Joe H. With David Plank, a minister, and S. E. Allgyer he was a pioneer in Mennonite Sunday-school work in Logan and Champaign counties, Ohio, served as superintendent for many years and as a teacher until he was incapacitated by old age. He served his church in its then broadening program in a number of official capacities. In 1905 he was elected to the Mennonite Evangelizing and Benevolent Board, and helped to form the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, which organization was completed May 2, 1906. He was a member of this Board 1906-18, and served on the Executive Committee 1910-17. He was elected to the Board of the Elkhart Institute Association in 1901 for a term of three years. Secretarial records give his name on the Board as of 1905. He was a member of the Mennonite Board of Education to 1918, and was treasurer in 1918. He was active in the Ohio Mennonite Sunday-school conference movement. He was treasurer of the Ohio Sunday School and Young People's Conference 1912-15, and treasurer of the Ohio Mennonite Sunday School Conference 1916-24, a member of its Executive Committee 1924-30. He was also active in the organization of the Mennonite Aid Plan, a mutual insurance organization for members of the Mennonite Church of Logan and Champaign counties, and served as its secretary for many years.

From the late 1870's to 1899 he lived near West Liberty, Ohio, and 1899-1945 near Bellefontaine, Ohio. He died at his home May 4, 1945. Interment was in Fair View Cemetery at West Liberty.

J.L.Y.

Yoder, Edward (1893-1945), Mennonite (MC) teacher, writer, and editor, the oldest son of Mahlon T. and Mary Yoder, was born July 30, 1893, at Kalona, Iowa. He attended Hesston College (B.A.), Kansas University, University of Colorado, University of Iowa (M.A.), and University of Pennsylvania (Ph.D.). He taught Latin and Greek at Hesston College (1920-23, 1928-32) and Goshen College (1926-28, 1933-38). He was Dean at Hesston (1929-32) and Dean of Men at Goshen (1935-37). On the editorial staff at Mennonite Publishing House, Scottsdale (1938-45), he was general editor of Sunday-school literature, editor of Advanced Sunday School Quarterly, editor of peace section of Doctrinal Supplement of the Gospel Herald, and librarian of the Mennonite Historical Library. He was coeditor of Mennonite Historical Bulletin and an associate editor and frequent contributor to Mennonite Quarterly Review. He was the author of Lessons in Christian Doctrine (Scottsdale, 1939), Our Mennonite Heritage (Akron, 1942), Mennonites of Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania (Scottsdale, 1942), Must Christians Fight? (with H. S. Bender and Jesse Hoover, Akron, 1943), The Christian and Conspiration (with Don. Smucker, Akron, 1945). He became a member of the Mennonite Church (MC) in 1909, and was active in church work. He was secretary of the Curriculum Committee, treasurer of the Historical Committee of Mennonite General Conference, superintendent of the Sunday school and secretary of the board of trustees of the Scottsdale congregation. On Aug. 4, 1920, he married Estie Miller. They had one son, Virgil Edward. Edward Yoder died March 28, 1945, and is buried in the Scottsdale cemetery. He was one of the more able scholars of the Mennonite Church. P.E.

Yoder, John K. (1824-1906), was one of the outstanding Amish bishops during the latter half of the 19th century when many midwestern congregations turned away from some of the traditional practices and gradually assumed the name Amish Mennonite (q.v.). He was born in Mifflin County (q.v.), Pa., where in 1850 he was ordained preacher. In 1855, he with his wife, the former Lydia Zook, moved to Wayne County (q.v.), Ohio, where, four years later, he was ordained bishop in the Wayne County Amish congregation (q.v.) then numbering 300 members and divided into a north and a south district. When the bishop in the north district and a small following withdrew over the issue of baptizing in a stream, Yoder became the sole bishop of the entire congregation, which in 1862 erected a meetinghouse and later became known as the Oak Grove Amish Mennonite Church (q.v.). The same year the first Amish general conference (Allgemeine Dienerversammlung, q.v.) was entertained by the congregation. In a few years Yoder's talents and administrative ability gave him a leading role in the conference deliberations. When he was elected moderator in 1864, he secured the adoption of rules of procedure for the conference. A firm advocate of congregational rule he agreed in 1889 to the appointment of a laymen's committee to set up a new discipline allowing departure from certain traditional Amish cultural practices—buttons instead of hooks and eyes on men's clothing, a "barber haircut," and holding evening religious services in the meetinghouse. Although this decision cost him the fellowship of some of his more conservative friends in Pennsylvania, he lived to see the wisdom of his decision vindicated. He was one of the founders of the Ohio Amish Mennonite Conference (q.v.) in 1893 and of the Ohio and Pennsylvania A.M. Conference in 1897, which was later called the Eastern A.M. Conference. J.S.U.

John Umble, "The Oak Grove Amish Mennonite Church . . .," MQR XXXI (1957) 163-219, passim.

Yoder, Joseph Warren (1872-1956), the son of an Amish preacher, Christian Z. Yoder, and his wife Rosanna McGonegal Yoder, an Irish Catholic orphan reared by an Amish maiden lady. Following his graduation from Brethren Normal School (now Juniata College) in 1895, he served for two years as principal of the Milroy (Pa.) High School. His outstanding personality and his success as an inspiring teacher led to an invitation by John S. Coffman (q.v.) to teach at the Elkhart Institute (q.v.) where he served as an instructor in English, music, and Greek in 1897-1901, interrupted by a period of study at Northwestern University. He returned to Juniata College in 1901 where he secured the B.A. degree in 1904. Following his graduation he taught in Lock Haven (Pa.) Teachers Normal for a number of years. But from 1904 on, one of his major interests was music. He taught music classes for Brethren, Mennonites, Methodists, River Brethren, and Amish Mennonites. He became one of the most widely known "musical directors" at teachers' institutes in Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, and Virginia. His connection with Juniata College as "high school visitor" attracted many young people to that institution. He is widely known for his books: Rosanna of the Amish (1940), his mother's story, an intimate, authentic account of Amish family life; Amische Lieder (1942), a "first" in the history of musicology—notating the tunes of the hymns sung by the Amish in Mifflin County, Pa.; Rosanna's Boys (1949), the sequel to the 1940 volume; and Amish Traditions (1950), an effort to show that many divisions arise from unscriptural causes. "J. W." maintained his membership in the Mennonite Church (Maple Grove, at Belleville, Pa.) where he was baptized and where on Nov. 15, 1956, his funeral services were held. He died on Nov. 13, 1956. J.S.U.

Yoder Amish Mennonite Church, Berne, Ind. In 1870 a small schismatic group of Amish Mennonites built a meetinghouse near Berne in Adams County, Ind. The first minister is said to have been a John Richner. In 1886 the congregation bought the Baumgartner meetinghouse. A later minister was Daniel Yoder (1853-1924) of Linn Grove, Ind. In 1892 he attended the fifth annual conference sessions of the Indiana-Michigan A.M. Conference, which met in the Howard-Miami meetinghouse that year. In 1900 the little congregation even served as host to the district conference sessions; they used the Egly Defenseless Mennonite meetinghouse which was a half-mile west of the Yoder meetinghouse.

In 1905 there were 12 members in the Yoder congregation. Two years later Yoder moved to Leo, Ind., where his brother Eli was bishop of the Leo A.M. congregation. By 1909 only two aged women remained as members. About that time regular services were discontinued. J.C.W.

Yoder Mennonite Church (MC), located near Yoder, Reno Co., Kan., a member of the South Central Conference, was organized in 1919 with 65 charter members, mostly of Amish background. For a few years persons from the community had united with the West Liberty Mennonite Church near Inman, Kan. Since this church was some 20 miles away, Mennonites at Yoder worshiped in schools or private homes, assisted by interested persons in the Hesston community and the college. In 1919 a church was built. L. O. King moved to the community to be the first pastor of the congregation, continuing as pastor until his death in 1940.

Within a year following April 1942, five young men were ordained as ministers who had grown to manhood in the Yoder church. In 1946 three members went as foreign relief workers, one each to Europe, China, and Ethiopia. The membership in 1957 was 260; the ministers were A. A. Bontrager, Edward Yutzy, and Harry A. Diener, bishop.

H.A.D.

York County, Ont. Mennonite interests in York County center about the townships of Markham, Whitchurch, and Vaughan, and the city of Toronto. The Markham settlement, about 20 miles northeast of Toronto, took rise when the Mennonites who came to Waterloo County in 1803 found difficulty with their land titles. In Whitchurch Township the families early met in homes for worship, principally at Huber and Stecklin, named for the pioneering Hoover and Steckley families. Services at Huber and Stecklin ended in 1860, when the church was built at Almira in Markham Township. The Almira congregation has always been small, and not fully organized, but considered a part of the settlement of which the Wideman church is the larger part. Henry Wideman, a minister from Bucks County, Pa., came in 1803. Abraham Grove (Groff), a bishop, came in 1808. The first worship and funeral services were held at Dixon's Hill until about 1817, when a log building was erected on the present site of the Wideman church, about 2 miles north of Markham, which served as church and school. A brick church was built here about 1857, replaced by a larger one in 1928. The membership of the Markham Mennonite (MC) churches has been about 200. Cedar Grove to the southeast began about 1861, when a frame building was erected for funerals. Monthly appointments soon followed. Near it is the Risser (q.v.) Old Order Mennonite Church, the chief place of worship for this body. The Wideman church was shared by Risser and Wideman groups until 1928. The Almira church is still shared.

In Vaughan Township, west of Markham, the Schmitt meetinghouse was the one place of worship until after 1900. Erected in 1824 it is still in fair state of repair and is used for funerals. Peter Muselman, a minister, came here in 1803. The Jacob

Schmitt family came about 1812. Christian Troyer was a minister by 1836, but soon allied himself with the Daniel Hoch (q.v.) movement. The M.B.C. and O.O.M. movements both made inroads here 1875-90. (See Wideman Mennonite Church.)

The mission in Toronto (q.v.) began in 1907 with Samuel Honderich as superintendent. At first it was located in the slums of the city. Since 1914 it has been in the eastern part of the city. The work has grown to include Warden Park, a new Sunday school and worship center 3 miles east of the Danforth Mission and 3 miles south of the Morningside Mission. These fully occupied areas are now served widely by Sunday school, summer Bible school, and preaching services. Four miles northeast was a slum known as Geco, which Mennonite workers from Ellesmere served until 1955, when it was totally dismantled. Ellesmere is 8 miles toward Markham and has grown from a mission in a small settlement to a large suburban housing area with a commodious Mennonite church erected 1952-54. Organizationally these are all combined. In 1958 Emerson McDowell was bishop, Glen Brubacher and John Hess ministers, with a combined membership of 57. J.C.F.

York County, Pa., was the fifth county carved out (1749) in Eastern Pennsylvania. It has 914 square miles with a population of 202,737. Michael Danner, of the Mellinger Mennonite (MC) congregation in Lancaster County, crossed the Susquehanna River by 1719. The scattered Mennonites at first used private homes for their services; by 1774 Danner, a county commissioner, had obtained a grant from the Penns for 12 acres for church and cemetery purposes. This was the start of the Bair's Hanover congregation, three miles east of the borough of Hanover. In 1798 a request for a lot in York (City) was ordered canceled, but in 1805 such a lot, with similar purposes as at Bair's Hanover, was granted. The meetinghouse at Strickler's, between Wrightsville and Hellam, was built about 1798, the Garber meetinghouse at Menges Mills in 1814. In the Manchester area the Hoover union meetinghouse and private dwellings were used until the substantial stone church was built in 1820. At Witmer's the first meetinghouse was built in 1818, and at Hershey's in 1825. By 1826 a church had been built at Bair's Hanover. Mennonites, scattered well over York County, used at least one other union church. At the turn of the century the leaders were Henry Strickler, Andrew Gerber, and Abraham Flury in the eastern district, Henry Kendig, Joseph Updegraff, and David Witmer at York, John Roth and Abraham Geib at Manchester, John Lethra, Henry Sipe, and Joseph Hershey in the middle district, George Forrey, John F. H. Hershey, and Andrew Boyer at the Gerber church; at least some of these men were ordained. The first known bishop was Abraham Roth (1773-1854), followed by John Hostetter (1791-1866), Frederick Stauffer (1813-84), and Daniel Shank (1832-1906). The churches were then supplied until 1926, when Noah H. Mack (1881-1948) served; Richard Danner was ordained in 1935. The total Mennonite membership, now taking a new lease on life by colonization, was 375 in 1957, with two missions in York. I.D.L.

York Mennonite Mission (MC), York, Pa., established in 1954, is located at 451 East Princess Street. In 1957 it had 15 members and was a mission station in the Lancaster Mennonite Conference. M.G.

York (Pa.) Mennonite Church (MC), located on North Hartman Street, is a member of the Lancaster Mennonite Conference. In the 18th century a Mennonite church and cemetery was located on Market Street near Pine Street in York. This meetinghouse, built in or before 1803, was sold in 1917. When it ceased to be used is not known. In 1903 the Fourth United Brethren Church on North Hartman Street was purchased as an outpost for the Stony Brook (then Witmer) congregation. On July 28, 1935, H. Frank Leaman was ordained as pastor-superintendent. On May 11, 1954, he and some of the membership withdrew, and Roy M. Geigley became pastor-superintendent. Lloyd R. Horst was ordained pastor Dec. 26, 1956. The membership in 1957 was 26. I.D.L.

York's Corners (N.Y.) Mennonite Church (MC), in Allegany County, in western New York, just north of Genesee, Pa., established in 1952, is a mission station of the Lancaster Mennonite Conference. In 1957 it had 13 members, with J. Ivan Smoker as pastor. M.G.

Yother, Henry (1810-1900), a pioneer Mennonite (MC) bishop, was born near Mt. Pleasant, Westmoreland Co., Pa., a great-grandson of Hans and Anna Yoder, immigrants from Europe in 1720. In 1845 he was ordained a minister, and in 1857 bishop. He was associated with Bishop John D. Overholt (1797-1878) and minister Martin Loucks (1798-1869), serving at the Pennsville and Stonerville meetinghouses near Scottdale, Pa. He preached in both English and German. On May 27, 1862, at the Oberholtzer meetinghouse in Mahoning County near Columbiana, Ohio, he preached the first English sermon in that congregation at the funeral of Lewis Landis. In 1864 he moved to Cullom in Livingston County, Ill., and in 1871 to Gage County, Neb. In Nebraska he was not officially connected with a Mennonite congregation, but until his death in 1900 he traveled among large and small congregations of Mennonite pioneers of Kansas, Nebraska, western Missouri, and Iowa, conducting baptismal and communion services, and was instrumental in ordaining ministers for smaller congregations. The groups he served were Mennonites (MC), Amish Mennonites, and Russian Mennonites. The Evangelizing Committee of Elkhart, Ind., arranged for him to spend time traveling among the churches and scattered members, serving their spiritual needs. He was instrumental in bringing about the organization of the Kansas-Nebraska Conference. W.D.S.

Edward Yoder, "Henry Yother (1810-1900), Mennonite Preacher and Bishop," MHB, June 1944.

Young People's Bible Meeting, the name of the Sunday evening meeting for young people in the Mennonite Church (MC), also called Young People's Meeting, somewhat parallel to the Christian Endeavor which began in 1881. The first YPBM was held in the Prairie Street Mennonite Church at Elkhart, Ind., in 1887, an outgrowth of a children's meeting on Sunday evening before the evening preaching service, initiated in 1884 by John F. Funk with Henry Brenneman and Joseph Summers. The second YPBM was begun in 1889 by C. Z. Yoder at the Oak Grove Mennonite Church near Smithville, Ohio, as the outgrowth of young people's "singsings" which had been meeting for several years in other places. The third such meeting was begun at the Waldo Amish Mennonite Church near Flanagan, Ill., in early 1891, and the fourth at the Zion Church near Bluffton, Ohio, in 1892. About the same time young people's meetings sprang up in Ontario following the J. S. Coffman revivals in 1891-92. The movement soon spread over the church, and by 1910 was well established except in the East. By 1906 the church papers, the Herald of Truth (in 1908 Gospel Herald), published topics and helps for Young People's Meetings, and by 1909 the General Conference appointed a YPBM Topics Committee (in 1931 merged with two other committees into the Commission for Christian Education, q.v.), which published program outlines and helps in the Christian Monitor and in 1922 began publishing the YPBM Topics Booklet, changed in 1945 to the Program Builder. By these means universal common topics were discussed in Sunday evening meetings throughout the Mennonite Church (MC).

Although called Young People's Meetings, usually they became meetings for the entire congregation in which old and young took part, held in the meetinghouse before the evening worship service or as the sole evening service, usually sponsored by a special committee appointed for this purpose, and often with printed programs prepared several months in advance.

In the East, especially in the Lancaster Conference, the meetings were really never held on Sunday evening but were held often on Saturday evening, and then largely only for young people.

About 1940 a movement developed for Junior Bible Meetings, which were held parallel to the adult YPBM on Sunday evening, which have become a fixed feature in most of the well-organized congregations.

The YPBM has made a great contribution to the church in Bible teaching, development of character and conviction, promotion of activity and missions, and increasing denominational loyalty. H.S.B.

Paul M. Lederach, "History of Religious Education in the Mennonite Church," Chap. VI, "History of the Young People's Bible Meeting" (unpublished doctoral dissertation at Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, 1949) pp. 194-222.

Young People's Conference, a youth movement in the Mennonite Church (MC) which flourished for a short time in 1920-23, and led in part to the creation of the Young People's Problems Committee (q.v.). It had its origin in a "General Conference of Mennonites in France in Reconstruction Work held at Clermont-en-Argonne, Meuse, France," June 20-22, 1919. (Report under the above title printed and available in GCL). This conference was organized on an intended permanent basis with a constitution whose name was tentatively chosen as "Mennonite Young People's Movement," and which was to meet annually. Its clearly stated purpose was constructive and progressive, and its three annual conference programs represented in effect a Christian Life Conference with accent on the problems of youth, but the movement represented dissatisfaction with the rather slow-moving general church leadership and program, and also a determination to work out a larger and more influential place for the maturer young people in the work and leadership of the church. Since much of the older leadership of the church reacted with skepticism and even suspicion to the new movement, opposition and tension developed. Wiser counsels prevailed in the end and the movement got started in America, its name changed to Young People's Conference. Three annual meetings were held: West Liberty, Ohio, Aug. 28-30, 1920; Sterling, Ill., June 15-18, 1922; Middlebury, Ind. (Forks church), June 14-17, 1923. The general tensions in the church at this time resulting in the closing of Goshen College for the year 1923-24 and division in a number of congregations in Indiana, Ohio, Ontario, and Eastern Pennsylvania led to confusion in the ranks of the leadership of the Young People's Conference, and ultimately to the discontinuance of the annual meetings. The program of the 1923 conference listed the committee in charge elected in 1922 as Harold S. Bender, chairman; Walter E. Yoder, secretary; John L. Yoder, treasurer; Payson Miller, and Vernon Smucker. Part of the energies of the group was channeled into the bi-weekly periodical, The Christian Exponent, established Jan. 4, 1924, and discontinued Sept. 11, 1928, edited by Vernon Smucker. H.S.B.

Young People's Institute, a retreat of two to four days for young people 16-25 years of age, for worship, instruction, discussion, inspiration, and recreation, held in churches, schools, or retreat grounds, usually during the summer vacation, in the Mennonite Church (MC). The first institute was held on the campus of Goshen College in 1927, sponsored by the Young People's Problems Committee. In 1930 the YPPC sponsored three institutes, one at Scottsdale, Pa., one at Goshen, Ind., and one at Kitchener, Ont., then turned the movement over to district conferences and local institutions such as colleges. The movement soon was widely accepted and for years large institutes were held annually at Hesston, Goshen, and Eastern Mennonite College, as well as in other locations east and west. In 1936 the first 12-day institute was held at Arbutus Park, near Johnstown, Pa., which later developed into the Laurelville YPI near Mt. Pleasant, Pa., in 1943. By 1955 the movement had pretty well run its course, but it had been of great value to thousands of young people. H.S.B.

Young People's Meeting: see Young People's Bible Meeting.

Young People's Paper, an 8-page 10¼ x 14¾ in. illustrated biweekly (changed January 1898 to a 20-page monthly, and in December 1898 to a 24-page monthly) published by the Mennonite Publishing

Co. (MC) at Elkhart, Ind., for the Young People's Paper Association (first appearance in the masthead Oct. 27, 1894) January 1894 to March 1906. Editors were M. S. Steiner to the end of March 1895, C. K. Hostetler to September 1899, S. B. McManus, a non-Mennonite, from then on (in the absence of files of the journal it is impossible to report who had editorial responsibility to the end). Contributing editors during the early period were J. S. Hartzler, Abr. Ebersole, D. H. Bender, Charles McClintic, S. F. Coffman, and Ephraim Weber. The content was general, inspirational, edificatory, educational, some secular but mostly religious, with much reprint material from non-Mennonite sources. In January 1898 a new department was established, "The Young People's Meeting," usually two pages with program outlines and helps. (GCL has a file of 1894-99.)

H.S.B.

Young People's Problems Committee, a standing committee of five of the Mennonite General Conference (MC), appointed in 1924, merged into the Commission for Christian Education and Young People's Work (q.v.) in 1937. Its purpose was to assist the church in improving its ministry to its youth, and to help guide the youth organizations springing up in many local churches, especially the literary societies (q.v.). It introduced and for a time sponsored the Young People's Institute (q.v.) and promoted the holding of Christian Life Conferences. Major leaders in the committee were Noah Oyer (d. 1930) and O. O. Miller. Similar committees were established about the same time in a number of the district conferences (MC) usually called simply "Young People's Committee."

H.S.B.

J. B. Shenk, "A History of Organized Youth Work in the Mennonite Church" (unpublished paper in GCL).

Y.P.S. and S.S.U. Notes, the 4-page 5½ x 8½ in. quarterly organ of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Unions of the Eastern District Conference (GCM), the forerunner of the present C. E. Witness. It was published 1931-40.

J.E.F.

Young People's Union (GCM). While a concern for the nurture of its youth was implicit in the General Conference movement from its beginning, the formal establishment of a conference-wide youth organization did not occur until 1941, when a constitution for the Young People's Union of the General Conference Mennonite Church was officially adopted. Prior to this time, however, there had been evident interest in conference youth work as early as 1917, when a Sunday School and Young People's Committee was set up in 1920, a young people's program being presented at General Conference sessions since that year, the first Youth Page appearing in the Mennonite on Nov. 22, 1923, and district young people's retreats beginning that same year. By 1935 the movement was clearly under way to organize the young people of the conference into an auxiliary organization of General Conference, though the first draft of a constitution presented in 1938 was rejected.

Since its organization in 1941 the Young People's Union has grown considerably in activity and influence. Counseled under the Board of Education and Publication, it has its own executive officers, cabinet, annual council of district and institutional representatives, conference-wide retreats, workshops, and its own general assembly meeting in conjunction with the sessions of General Conference. In December 1953 William Gering became its first youth worker, at first on a part-time basis and later full-time. All young people in General Conference churches between the ages 12 and 30 are considered members of the YPU, whose slogan is "A United Mennonite Youth in Christ."

Leading projects carried on by the YPU include editing the Youth Section in the Mennonite, preparing program helps for local church use, producing an annual prayer calendar, promoting young people's retreats and voluntary service, sponsoring the missionary education fund to help train foreign students in our schools, and more recently the development of a functional youth program in local churches with a threefold emphasis on (1) Christian faith and life, (2) Christian fellowship, and (3) Christian service. Significant in this last development was the publication of the Youth Manual written by Elmer Ediger, to be followed by other manuals on youth work, and the promotion of this "fellowship plan" through retreats, workshops, publications, and church visitation later carried on largely by the youth worker.

E.W.

Young People's Union Prayer Calendar has been a publication of the G.C.M. Young People's Union since 1941. At first only a one-page list of prayer reminders for each day of the month, it was developed into a 12-page wall calendar, and in 1955 into a devotional booklet containing suggested Bible readings as well as prayer requests. Recent editors have been: Peter Kehler, Henry Funk, Lois Duerksen Deckert, and John Bertsche.

M.SH.

Young People's Union Retreats and Workshops have been sponsored for the inspiration of young people of the General Conference Mennonite Church, usually in connection with the triennial General Conference session. The first one was held at Seven Oaks, Cal., in August 1935. Others have been held at Camp Mack near Milford, Ind., 1947; St. Peter, Minn., 1950; Canon Beach, Ore., 1953; Lake Winnipeg, Man., 1956; and Camp Friedenswald, Mich. The 1950 and 1953 sessions were designated as workshops since attention was given to the development of principles and practices for local youth fellowships.

M.SH.

Grace Miller Neufeld, "The Young People's Union," Menn. Life VIII (July 1953) 128-30.

Youth Committee of the Mennonite Brethren Conference, consisting of five members, came into being at the 1936 convention of the General Conference. At the 1933 general conference a Young People's Union Committee had been organized which produced several quarterly leaflets of study helps for young people's organizations in the churches in 1934. The Youth Committee began the Christian Leader in April 1937, which continued under its jurisdiction until the 1951 general conference sessions, when it became the official English organ of the conference and was placed under the jurisdiction of the Publication Committee. The Youth Committee sponsored Christian Fellowship organizations in the churches, promoted youth camps and other young people's activities. More and more, however, the youth work became a matter of the district conferences because of local conditions; in the revised constitution of the Conference as temporarily adopted in 1954 it became a consultative committee composed of one member at large and representatives from the youth committees of the districts. Since then the youth work has rested almost solely with the districts. O.Ha.

Youth Movement in Holland: see Doopsgezinde Jongerenbond and Friese Doopsgezinde Jongeren Bond.

Youth Office (GCM) was created at 722 Main Street, Newton, Kan., in June 1955, when the first full-time Youth Worker was called to serve the Young People's Union (q.v.). This youth office was to help organize and activate local youth fellowships, help Mennonite youth rallies, youth workshops and retreat work, and gather and publish program helps and other necessary youth materials. Youth groups were encouraged to write to the youth office to share their problems and concerns. William Gering served as part-time Youth Worker 1953-55, and full-time 1955. W.Ge.

Youth's Banner, The, was a 4-page, illustrated M.B.C. Sunday-school magazine published apparently from 1897 until at least the latter part of 1907 by H. S. Hallman (q.v.) at Berlin, Ont. J. A. Huffman refers to it as a semimonthly, but the few issues available at Goshen College indicate that it was a monthly in 1906-7. It contained inspirational stories, articles, and poems and a discussion of the Sunday-school lesson. N.P.S.

J. A. Huffman, History of the Mennonite Brethren in Christ Church (New Carlisle, Ohio, 1920).

Youth's Christian Companion, founded in 1920, was until the end of 1956 an 8-page, 9 x 11½ in. and thereafter a 16-page 5¼ x 8½ in. weekly devoted to the interest of young people, ages 16-24, published and printed by the Mennonite Publishing House, Scottdale, Pa. Until Dec. 31, 1954, Clayton F. Yake was its continuous editor from the beginning of the paper. On Jan. 1, 1955, Urie A. Bender became editor.

The periodical endeavors to serve young people in all areas of Christian life, with Christian fiction, feature articles, poetry, missionary messages, information of church activities, such as MYF, MRSC, I-W, news for youth, schools and colleges, articles on nature and science, vocational guidance, and other inspirational messages for the development of Christian character and the devotional life. The 1958 circulation was about 34,000. C.F.Y.

Youths' Monitor was an 8-page 7½ x 10½ in. illustrated religious magazine published by Daniel Brenneman (q.v.) at Goshen, Ind., monthly, 1883-85, "in the interest of the young people and children, adapted especially for the home circle and Sabbath school." It contained articles, stories, and poems, mostly written by a group of "special contributors" and letters written by the readers and occasionally by the special contributors. For the first seven months the list of special contributors included Mennonites of other groups as well as Evangelical United Mennonites, the group of which Daniel Brenneman was a leader. Later the contributors seem to have been exclusively United Evangelical Mennonites (later a part of the MBC). (GCL has the first volume.) N.P.S.

Ypecolsga, a hamlet in the Dutch province of Friesland, where Leenaert (q.v.) Bouwens baptized 20 persons in 1551-54, four in 1554-56, six or seven in 1557-61, and six in 1563-65. Since there was apparently no congregation at Ypecolsga, the converts may have joined the neighboring church of Lege-meer (q.v.). vdZ.

Yper(en): see Ieper.

Ypsilanti (Mich.) State Hospital was the location of Civilian Public Service Unit No. 90, which opened in March 1943 and closed in October 1946. Of the 75 men, 25 were in a relief training for foreign relief service. In addition to the men in the unit, an average of 35 women (wives and friends of the men) worked in the hospital. In the summers of 1944-45 Mennonite service units in which 51 young women were enrolled also served the institution. A large, modern, well-equipped, progressive institution, the hospital offered the Mennonite unit a satisfactory service experience. Much of the credit for the outstanding work of the hospital and for the excellent relations between the unit and the hospital was given to its superintendent, Dr. O. R. Yoder, a former Mennonite and graduate of Goshen College. The hospital continued to use conscientious objectors after the war and in 1958 was employing eight Mennonite young men who were doing their alternative (I-W) service here. Unit No. 90 published a yearbook entitled Ypsi. M.G.

Melvin Gingerich, Service for Peace (Akron, 1949) pp. 231-36.

Ysbrand (Isebrand) Dircksz Schol was burned at the stake at Brussels, Belgium, on July 27, 1534, then aged 70. He had been arrested for heresy at Amsterdam as early as 1525, but was released after recanting. In Brussels he had been in prison twice before on a charge of heresy, but was released because of insufficient evidence. It is not clear whether Ysbrand was an Anabaptist; he was probably a Sacramentist (q.v.). (Mellink, Wederdopers, 344; Verheyden, Courtrai-Bruxelles, 61, No. 4.) vdZ.

Ysbrant Scheerjer, an Anabaptist martyr, was burned at the stake at Leeuwarden, Netherlands, on Nov. 16, 1549. He had held religious meetings in his house, and there "read from the Bible and the New Testament." Persisting in his "errors" he was sentenced to death. vdZ.

Sentence Book of the Court of Friesland; J. Reitsma, Honderd jaren uit de Gesch. der Hervorming . . . in Friesland (Leeuwarden, 1876) 63.

Ysenbaert, Joost: see Isenbaert.

Ysenbeek (IJzenbeek), a former Mennonite family at Harlingen in Friesland, Netherlands, where they were businessmen (e.g., salt works) and pillars of the church from the 17th century. Daniel IJsenbeek (1784-1859), after studying at the Amsterdam seminary, served the congregations of Oost- and West-Graftdijk 1807-9 and Alkmaar 1809-54. Among his publications are a Leerrede (Alkmaar, 1834), a sermon to commemorate his 25 years of service at Alkmaar, Bijbelsch Handwoordenboek van zedelijke Voorbeelden en Onderwerpen ontleend aan de schriften des Ouden en Nieuwen Testaments . . . (Amsterdam, 1838), and Bijdragen tot de Geschiedenis der Doopsgezinden en der zelve Volksplantingen in . . . Rusland (Hoorne, 1848). (N.N.B.Wb. I, 1597.) vöZ.

Ysselstein: see IJsselstein.

Ytens (Itens), a hamlet in the Dutch province of Friesland, where there is a Mennonite congregation, formerly called Kromwal (q.v.). In 1865 a meeting-house (still in use) and a parsonage were built at Ytens. The pastor at this time was Gerhard Pol, serving here 1862-83, followed by R. Cuperus 1884-86, P. Zondervan 1889-91, A. Binnerts 1892-97, H. Britzel 1899-1902, E. Engelkes 1902-5, A. de Vries Mzn 1906-14, P. J. Keuning 1914-21, S. I. van der Meulen 1922-29, J. H. van Riemsdijk 1930-d.40, G. M. Kusters 1941-44, T. Hoogslag 1950-56, and M. C. Postema since 1957. The baptized membership numbered 98 in 1861, 122 in 1900, 105 in 1926, 99 in 1958. An organ was acquired in 1900. Church activities include ladies' circles at Ytens and Wieuwerd, a youth group 18-25, a youth club, and Sunday school for children. (DB 1890, 139; 1900, 231.) vöZ.

Yushanlee, a Mennonite estate of the Molotschna settlement in South Russia established by Johann Cornies (q.v.), the great organizer. One evening in 1830, while Cornies was driving his flock of sheep on the steppes, he stopped for the night along the Yushanlee River and noticed the next morning that the site was very suitable for a farm. He decided at once to build an advance station of civilization here. Soon a primitive clay hut stood here, which grew into the thriving unique model farm called Yushanlee. The 9,450 acres were leased from the government for an indeterminate period. In 17 years Yushanlee boasted a spacious dwelling, many stables and business buildings, all from the income of a tile factory on the land. In the garden there were 2,000 fruit trees, 1,750 plants of small fruits. A forest was planted with 68,000 trees, and an extensive nursery was kept up. Even though the farm was not Cornies' property, he developed it in exemplary fashion at great expense, and was rewarded by Czar Nicholas I with a gift of 1,350 acres of this land.

In 1879 Yushanlee, against the wishes and without the knowledge of the last surviving Cornies heir, passed into outside possession. The new owner razed the old buildings and put up a small castle with the pertinent buildings. Only the bell tower in the middle of the court remained as a last witness of the gigantic achievement of a great man. After the Revolution the estate was nationalized. D.H.E.

D. H. Epp, Johann Cornies (Steinbach, 1946); ML II, 448.

Zaandam, a town (pop. c46,000 with 1,302 Mennonites in 1955) about 6 miles north of Amsterdam in the Dutch province of North Holland. The Zaan River divides Zaandam into a West Side and an East Side; until the 19th century the East Side was economically the more important part. Some citizens of Zaandam, e.g., Pieter (q.v.) Claesz (Pieter de Coster), were executed at Amsterdam in 1535. In 1543 there was an Anabaptist congregation at Zaandam, of which Klaas Noome(n) was the preacher. Meetings were then held in the homes of the members. Leenaert Bouwens baptized 40 persons here in 1564; in the following years Lubbert Geritsz (q.v.) was an elder at Zaandam. Soon after this there were at least three Mennonite congregations at Zaandam: Waterlander, Frisian, and Flemish. Though the history of these groups during the 16th and 17th centuries is in many respects hazy, the following account may serve to clear up the complicated situation.

I. A Waterlander congregation existed at Zaandam from c1578. It was represented at a Waterlander conference held at Amsterdam in 1581. In the 16th-early 17th century the Waterlanders living at Koog (q.v.) aan de Zaan were members of this congregation until 1646, when they organized an independent congregation. The Zaandam Waterlander congregation, sometimes called "Komejanse Mennonieten" or "Komejannen" (q.v.), had a meetinghouse since before 1600, which was replaced in 1656. This meetinghouse was commonly called the North meetinghouse; it was situated on the East Side. The congregation was probably very large in the early 17th century. In 1656 the baptized members numbered 326; they lived on both the East Side and the West Side. About 1655 a second meetinghouse was built on the Dampad on the West Side. In 1675, 137 members lived on the West Side and 254 on the East Side. Soon after the (Ia) East Side, or North congregation, and the (Ib) Dampad congregation on the West Side developed into relatively independent churches, though for some time they had a common fund for the relief of their poor, and other connections as late as 1712.

The West Side Waterlander congregation (Ib) merged in 1687 with the Flemish congregation (IV) to form the United Mennonite Church (VI). This merger came about only after much conflict with the East Side Waterlanders (Ia). The history of this East Side church is continued under VIII.

II. A Frisian Mennonite church of Zaandam, obviously also dating from the 16th century and connected with Frisian groups at Westzaan (q.v.), Zaandijk (q.v.), and Wormerveer (q.v.), had a meetinghouse on the West Side at least from 1613. A new meetinghouse was built in 1628 on the West side, which was usually called the "Oude Huys" (Old house) in the 18th century. On Nov. 13-15, 1628, a general union of several Dutch Flemish and Frisian groups was discussed in this new meetinghouse. The union was, however, not effected because of opposition by the Frisian elder P. J. Twisck (q.v.), of Hoorn. After the Frisians at Zaandijk and Wormerveer had founded independent congregations, the Zaandam Frisian Mennonites formed a single congregation with those at Westzaan until c1700. Until c1670 Westzaan was even the more important part of this congregation, and most of the preachers lived there. But gradually, as many members moved from Westzaan to Zaandam, Zaandam became the center and later on an independent congregation developed there. In 1659 the Westzaan, Zaandam, and Zaandijk congregation numbered 194 baptized members; in 1672 there were 179 Frisian Mennonites at Zaandam and c200 in 1700. In the early 17th century this Frisian church was rather conservative, but gradually it became more progressive, in the 18th century even liberal, strongly influenced by Collegiantism (q.v.). After the Collegiant meetings had stopped in most churches, they were still held by the Zaandam Oude Huys congregation, led by preachers and laymen; Adrian Rogge (1732-1826), a layman, was still conducting them at the age of 76. At first the preachers and elders were all chosen from the members; they were untrained and unsalaried. Among them were very capable men like Jacob Gerritsz Corver, serving 1608-c60, Jan Jansz Muusse 1651-87, Cornelis Ariaensz Loosjes 1693-1720?, Waligh Gerrits Vis 1714-d.67, Jan Lijnsz Rogge 1721-d.59, and Cornelis Gerritsz Meyn Jr. 1727-76. The first salaried minister in this church was Daniel Hovens, who served 1764-70, followed by Anthony de Vries, who was the first minister in this church educated at the Amsterdam Lamist (q.v.) seminary, serving 1771-91, T. J. de Hoop 1777-d.1838, Pieter Hollenberg 1793-1801, Matthijs Hesseling 1801-5, Gerbrand Koopmans 1805-14, and Bartel van Geuns 1830-41. During the 18th and 19th centuries the membership dropped from c200 to 120 in 1777 and c100 in 1801, rising to 150 in 1833. A pipe organ was acquired in 1782. In 1841 the Oude Huys congregation merged with the United Waterlander and Flemish congregation (Nieuwe Huys congregation; see VI). After this merger the old Frisian meetinghouse was sold; it was used as a storehouse until 1932, when it was destroyed by a fire.

III. A congregation commonly called Aris Janszevolk (see Verwer), which originated as a schism from the Frisian congregation, existed from 1649 (c30 members); it had a meetinghouse on the East Side and had dissolved by 1704. The reason for the schism was their dissatisfaction with the church policy of the Frisian elder Jacob Klaesz, who was on good terms with the Flemish.

IV. A Flemish Mennonite group existed at Zaandam from probably c1580. It was a rather small group, though its members were among the wealthiest shipowners and merchants of Zaandam. Concerning its history there is only scarce information.

Until c1648 the center of this group was at Koog aan de Zaan rather than Zaandam. In 1649 a Flemish meetinghouse was erected at Zaandam West Side on the Stikkelspad (now Stationsstraat), and the Zaandam part became independent. In 1687 this Flemish congregation merged with the Waterlander Dampad congregation (Ib) into the United Mennonite congregation (VI).

V. At Zaandam there was also a Groningen Old Flemish church, first mentioned in 1673, but probably dating from c1632. It had a meetinghouse on the Molenpad on the East Side. It was very conservative, maintaining old practices like footwashing until c1760. This church, always very small in membership (c40 in 1710), was led by lay preachers. In the 18th century it was commonly called Van Kalkers-volk after its elder Izaak van Kalker, serving 1711-c56. They often liberally supported the Prussian brethren. In 1774 the 18 remaining members joined the United Mennonite Church (VI).

VI. When the Dampad Waterlanders (Ib) and the Flemish congregation (IV) merged in 1687, it was resolved to drop the old names and "to forget these signs of former discord." Hence the congregation was called the United Mennonite Church (Vereenigde Doopsgezinde Gemeente). The Dampad and the Stikkelspad meetinghouses were abandoned and a new one built on the West Side. This spacious frame building, still in use, was dedicated on Nov. 2, 1687, by Galenus (q.v.) Abrahamsz of Amsterdam. For this new meetinghouse the United congregation is unusually called the Nieuwe Huys congregation. The old Dampad Waterlander meetinghouse was sold as a warehouse; the former Flemish church on Stikkelspad was at first for a few years rented to the Zaandam Lutheran congregation and was then used as a warehouse, and in 1712-14 remodeled as an orphanage; its fine rooms with old furniture can still be seen (renovated 1933); it was in use as an orphanage only until 1903; it is now used for church activities.

The Nieuwe Huys congregation developed into a strong congregation; at its founding the baptized membership stood at c600, in 1727 it was 763; decreasing to 671 in 1743, 400 in 1777, and only c250 in 1827, and again growing to c320 in 1840. With 150 members of the Oude Huys congregation (II), which in 1841 merged with the Nieuwe Huys, the membership numbered 461 in this year, 483 in 1847, 531 in 1861, 753 in 1900, 770 in 1926, 779 in 1942, 760 in 1949, when this congregation merged with the Zaandam-Oost congregation (VII).

At first after 1687 the congregation was served by untrained preachers chosen from its members, some of whom, however, received a small remuneration. Among these preachers were representatives of such well-known Zaandam families as Kalf (q.v.), Louwe (q.v.), three members of the Eyte (q.v., Aytte) family, Middelhoven (q.v.), Loosjes (q.v.) and Nen (q.v.). Jacob Adriaens Oujeans (q.v.) served 1725-41. The first fully salaried minister called from the outside was Gerrit ten Cate Thz, serving here 1755-72, followed by Michiel de Bleyker 1762-81, Jan van Gilse 1774-d.82, Hendrik van Gelder 1781-d.1808, S. Hoekstra Wz 1782-d.86, Pieter Beets Pz 1789-d.1813, Isaac Molenaar 1808-

14, Corn. Leendertz 1813-52, Taco Kuiper 1852-59, Bartel van Geuns, before the merger of 1841 a preacher in the Oude Huys, serving in the Nieuwe Huys 1841-70, Jacob van Gilse 1861-70, Rutger Brouwer 1870-76, Isaac Molenaar 1871-1914, D. Attema 1915-46, H. Wethmar 1946-.

This important Nieuwe Huys congregation was relatively late in calling a minister educated at the Mennonite seminary. The first seminary man to serve here was Isaac Molenaar, called in 1808. In its church government it was also rather conservative: in 1695 it was decided that the ministers were to be chosen by the church board rather than by the brethren of the church. The church board at this time was chosen by the male members, but in the early 18th century the church board became self-perpetuating. This practice continued until 1912. But by this time there was no longer any conservatism; though a proposal of 1913 to make baptism optional or even to abolish baptism was defeated, in 1918 it became possible to join the congregation without baptism.

The meetinghouse of 1687, though remodeled several times and beautifully renovated in 1930, is still in use. But the fine carved oak pulpit, which dated from the old Oude Huys and was placed in Nieuwe Huys in 1687, was removed in 1912. In 1784 a pipe organ was installed.

At the merger of the Frisian congregation (II) with this United Nieuwe Huys congregation in 1841, it was resolved to drop the name of United congregation and to call the congregation henceforth Fries(ch)e Doopsgezinde Gemeente te Zaandam, which was its official name until 1948, when it merged with the Zaandam-Oost (VII) congregation; it was usually called the Zaandam-West congregation.

VII. After 1774 there was only one congregation on the East Side; it was the old Waterlander North congregation (Ia), which since the 18th century is usually called Zaandam-Oost. This congregation, which numbered 254 members in 1675, had 321 baptized members in 1725, 288 in 1750, 268 in 1775, 236 in 1800, and only 195 in 1815, then increasing to 260 in 1846, 355 in 1861, 503 in 1900, 537 in 1926, reaching its peak of 542 members in 1929; from then there was considerable decline: 531 in 1935, 438 in 1942. In the 17th century this congregation for some time sided with the conservative Waterlanders, who conscientiously maintained the Hans de Ries (q.v.) confession of faith and opposed Collegiant (q.v.) views and practices. Pieter Pietersz (q.v.) was its elder 1625-d.51. But by 1688, when Foecke Floris (q.v.), who held Collegiant and even Socinian (q.v.) views, became a minister, great changes had taken place. In the 18th century the Zaandam-Oost congregation was very progressive. It supported the abortive attempt of the Amsterdam Lamist (q.v.) congregation in 1735 to found a Lamist conference, and in 1810 it was one of the three churches—the other two being Amsterdam and Haarlem—to prepare for the founding of the A.D.S.

At first Zaandam-Oost was served by untrained ministers, but as early as 1751 Cornelis Adriaansz Loosjes, a native of Zaandam, who had been educated at the Amsterdam Lamist seminary, was called as (salaried) pastor, serving until 1763. He was followed by Anthony van der Os 1764-95, a former Reformed pastor whose liberal views caused some trouble, not only in the Zaandam congregation, but also in the Rijper (q.v.) Sociëteit. Van der Os was followed by Hendrik van Voorst, serving 1779-d.1808, Samuel Muller 1809-14, Gerbrand Koopmans 1814-21, S. E. Wieling 1822-d.35, W. C. Mauve 1836-39, S. Blaupot ten Cate 1848-54, J. Hartog 1854-61, W. Jesse 1862-99, C. B. Hylkema 1899-1908, T. J. van der Ploeg 1908-26, J. G. Frerichs 1927-32, J. J. G. Wuite 1932-34, A. A. Sepp 1934-44, and J. Knot 1944-48.

The old meetinghouse of 1656, a frame building in a dilapidated state, was replaced by a new one dedicated Nov. 24, 1861. In 1867 it was damaged by fire, but was repaired. Formerly this congregation had an orphanage on the Grote Glop, which was used until 1903 and sold in 1919.

On Oct. 14, 1948, the Zaandam-Oost congregation merged with the Frisian West Side congregation (VI); the Zaandam-Oost meetinghouse was used until Sept. 23, 1953, and then sold to a Reformed group.

VIII. The present (United) Mennonite congregation of Zaandam is the result of the merger of 1948. The ministers of this congregation are H. Wethmar since 1948 and H. Luikinga since 1949. The only meetinghouse of the congregation is (since 1953) the former Zaandam-West church. At the merger the membership numbered 1,220, decreased to 950 in 1958. Church activities include three women's circles, a brotherhood, a youth group 18-25, youth group Elfregi (age 6-18), and a Sunday school for children.

The Zaandam congregation, in co-operation with the Dutch Central Committee for the Lodging of the Aged, has established the foundation "Het Mennisten Erf," which is in 1959 to start building a home for the aged with an annex for worship and youth activities.

Since the 16th century Zaandam has been a thriving industrial city (shipping, particularly to Baltic ports), the most important lumber port of the Netherlands. In 1953 it had 28 factories of wood products, many flour mills, and processors of groceries, cocoa, oil, cattle feed, paints, chemicals, and paper. Of the more than 300 picturesque windmills formerly used for these industries, only a few are left. In the 17th-19th centuries most of these businesses were owned by Mennonites, and at present a number of Mennonites are still engaged in manufacturing and trade. Among important 17th-19th century businessmen of Zaandam should be mentioned members of the following Mennonite families: Buys, Cardinaal, Corver, Dekker, Duyn, Eytte, Ghijsen, van der Goot, Honigh, Kalf, Keg, de Lange, Loosjes, Louwe, Mats, Meyn, Middelhoven, Muisse, Noomen, Ouwjans(s), Pondman, Rogge, Schoen, Swager, Taan, Vas, Vis, Visser, Zwaardemaker, later also Verkade. Most of these families now have died out or left Zaandam.

In 1742, 6,421 persons were living at Zaandam-East Side, 858 of whom, over 13 per cent, were Mennonites, and 6,315 persons on the West Side, 1,610 of whom, over 24 per cent, were Mennonites.

Thus in 1742 nearly 20 per cent of the Zaandam population was Mennonite, and in only 10 of the 339 Mennonite families was there a non-Mennonite spouse. In 1889 8.4 per cent of the population was Mennonite, in 1947 3.6 per cent, and in 1955 only 2.8 per cent.

(S. Lootsma), Het Nieuwe Huys, Friesch-Doopsgezinde Gemeente West-Zaandam (Zaandam, 1937); S. Blaupot ten Cate, Rede ter Gedachtenis (Zaandam, 1843); Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 673, 708, 865, 892; II, Nos. 2364-66; II, 2, Nos. 673-76; Blaupot t. C., Holland I and II, passim; DJ 1840, 45; 1850, 26-29, 96; DB 1861, 165; 1872, 57, 194; 1873, 195; 1877, 80; 1879, 7; 1883, 72; 1887, 68 f.; 1900, 111; Naamlijst 1810, 72-74; DJ 1921, 63 ff.; H. Wethmar, "Enkele gegevens over de plaats van de Doopsgezinden in de bevolking en de arbeid van Zaandam," in Stemmen VII (1958) No. 1, 1-16; information by J. Aten, H. M. Romijn and G. Honig.

Zaandijk: see Koog aan de Zaan.

Zaane (Zaanen, Saanen, Zanen, Zane), van, a Dutch Mennonite family, found at Haarlem from the early 17th century, Jacob van Zanen, of Westroen, was trained for the ministry at the Amsterdam Seminary; he served at Oost- and West Graftdijk 1783-1805 and Hoorn 1805-d.13, and also served as secretary of the Rijper (q.v.) Sociëteit. (Naamlijst 1806, 67; 1815, 87; DB 1872, 70-72; N.N.B.Wb. V, 1168.)

Zaans(ch)e Fonds: see Algemeen Pensioen-fonds.

Zacharias Cornelisz (d. c1640) was a Mennonite publisher and printer at Hoorn, Holland, from whose presses appeared a number of Mennonite books beginning not later than 1609, including works by Hendrik Alewijnsz, Dirck Gerrits, and P. J. Twisck. After his death his sons Jan and Pieter continued the printing shop. Pieter Zachariasz (Sacharyesen), who later took the family name of Hartevel(d)t, also published Mennonite books, e.g., the 1644 and 1657 editions of the hymnal Kleyn Hoorns Liet-boeck. Of some of these and other editions Zacharias Cornelisz and his sons were not the printers, but only the publishers. Pieter Zachariasz Hartevelt also published the portrait of Menno Simons by J. van de Velde. (DB 1887, 90; 1916, 62.)

Zacherle, Jörg, and his wife, Anabaptist martyrs of Wels, Austria. Jörg was a furrier of Krems; he and his wife were executed at Wels in 1528. (For particulars, see Wels and Haslinger, Leonhard.)

Zachte Vriezen: see Frisian Mennonites.

Zagradovka, a Mennonite settlement in South Russia, situated on the Ingulez River c60 miles slightly northeast of the city of Kherson, consisting of c60,000 acres of excellent soil. It was bought of Leo V. Kochubey in 1871 for the landless (q.v.) by the Molotschna Mennonite settlement. Eventually 16 villages were settled on this land in 1872-83, with 182 acres for each family.

The villages were Alexanderfeld, Neu-Schönsee, Friedensfeld, Neu-Halbstadt, Nikolaifeld, Orloff, Blumenort, Tiede, Altonau, Rosenort, Münsterberg, Gnadenfeld, Schönau, Steinfeld, Reinfeld, and Alexanderkrone. Nikolaidorf, which was settled in the vicinity but purchased by independent means, considered itself as belonging to the Zagradovka settlement except administratively. About 1908 this village was sold to Russians.

Most of the Zagradovka settlers were poor; the first years were difficult, but by 1900 most of them were moderately well-to-do and had spacious and well-built homes surrounded by lovely trees and gardens, with well-kept fields and green meadows on which cattle and horses of good breed were fed.

During the first years the settlers had to haul their grain by wagon and over very poor roads to Berislav on the Dnieper, a distance of about 50 miles; in 1890 a railway was built to within about 13 miles from the center of the settlement and in 1916 another to within about 6 miles.

By 1914 agriculture was flourishing; industry had been begun: Siemens in Blumenort and Wiebe in Orloff manufactured farm implements; a large and modern flour mill was in operation in Tiege; Alexanderfeld and Neu-Schönsee had smaller mills; several other small factories were in operation. A post office "Tiege," later renamed "Kochubeyevka," and a bank had been opened in the village of Tiege. Each village had its own public school. In 1895 the settlement built a Zentralschule with three classrooms in Neu-Schönsee, which was renovated in 1912, besides three homes for the teachers and one for the caretaker.

The settlement constituted an independent administrative unit, with headquarters in Tiege. In 1877 the volost (q.v.) erected two impressive buildings in Tiege—a drugstore and a medical center.

There were three churches in Zagradovka: (1) a Mennonite church in Nikolaifeld (q.v.), completed in 1891, with a membership of 1,241 in 1922; (2) an M.B. church in Tiege (q.v.), erected in 1888, membership of 427 in 1922; (3) an Evangelical Mennonite church in Orloff, organized in 1907 with 63 members, built in 1914; its membership in 1922 was 214.

Daughter settlements organized by Zagradovka, on rented land each with two villages, were Suvorovka in the Caucasus, 1897; Piessarev, near Berislav, 1903; Trubetskoye, near Berislav, 1904. Hundreds of families left for Siberia, where the government had granted them an area of 605,060 acres.

World War I stopped all progress. The Revolution brought ruin. In 1919 several thousand irregulars under Machno committed fearful atrocities in seven of the villages. A great deal of property was taken or destroyed, and many homes burned to the ground; 206 individuals were murdered and many maimed. In the famine some 329 persons starved to death.

In 1921-41 the Soviets exiled into uninhabited regions or concentration camps 448 individuals. When World War II began the men were deported to the east; most of them were able to return, but 301 have not been heard from. By 1941, 720 families, or 54.1 per cent of all the Mennonite families of the settlement, had been deprived of their head. At the retreat of the German army all the remaining settlers left; about 3,500 were evacuated to the west. Most of them eventually were overtaken by the Russian army and sent to the northern regions, mainly in Asiatic Russia. Zagradovka as a Mennonite settlement had ceased to exist. The last elder of the Mennonite church here, Heinrich Voth, survived the hardships and sufferings and resumed his ministry. He was the chief if not the only active Mennonite elder in Russia in 1953- . G.L.

G. Lohrenz, Sagradowka (Rosthern, 1947); Dietrich Neufeld, Mennonitentum in der Ukraine; Schicksalsgeschichte Sagradowkas (2d ed., Emden, 1922); Friesen, Brüderschaft, 423-27, 462-65; ML I, 83.

Zahler, Melchior, an Anabaptist deacon in Frutigen in the Swiss canton of Bern, was in 1710 imprisoned for three weeks in Bern on account of his faith. He then betook himself with his youngest children into the Neuenburg region. On the occasion of a visit to his older children in his home town, he fell into the hands of the persecuting authorities and was again put into the prison in Bern. With 60 other Anabaptists he was to have been sent to America on March 18, 1710. In Nijmegen they acquired their freedom. With Benedikt Brechbühl (q.v.) and Hans Bürky (q.v.), Zahler was sent to Amsterdam, to present to the city council a written account of their imprisonment and a confession of faith. Zahler returned to his Swiss home and was seized again and threatened with life imprisonment. (Müller, Berner Täufer, 284 ff.; ML IV.) NEFF.

Zahoriz (Sahorez), a village located five miles southwest of Dubno, Volhynia (q.v.) (Russia). Zahoriz and the neighboring villages of Futtur, Gorrit, Hecker, and others were settled by Swiss-Volhynian Mennonites who organized a congregation soon after 1861, holding services alternately at Zahoriz and Futtur, although neither had a meetinghouse. The time of the arrival of the Mennonites in these villages is unknown, but some apparently settled in Futtur in the early 19th century; by 1829 several families were living there, having come either from Poutchy (q.v.) or Vignanka. Zahoriz was probably settled by people from Poutchy. Before 1861 the Mennonite congregation in these villages was a subsidiary of the congregation at Poutchy; but when that larger settlement moved to the villages of Neumannovka (q.v.) and Kutusovka in eastern Volhynia, a congregation was organized with its center in Zahoriz and Futtur. Elder Johann Schrag of Poutchy moved to Zahoriz in 1861 and shepherded the church. Virtually all of the Mennonites in these villages emigrated to the United States in 1874, settling in Hutchinson and Turner counties, S.D. Ten families of Zahoriz and Futtur left Russia in April 1874 under the leadership of Andreas Schrag and were followed a few weeks later by the inhabitants of Gorrit and Hecker. M.H.S.

Zaltbommel, a town in the Dutch province of Gelderland, formerly the seat of a Mennonite congregation, usually called Bommel, not to be confused with the Bommel (q.v.) and Ooltgensplaat congregation on the island of Goeree. Of the Zaltbommel congregation there is only scarce information: it had originated by 1595, for in this year the Reformed pastor reported that the Mennonites in his town were increasing and holding public meetings. In the 17th century this congregation belonged to the Flemish branch. It was represented at a Flemish conference at Haarlem in 1649, when its pulpit was vacant. Probably it died out soon after. (DB 1910, 10; Blaupot t. C., Holland I, 222, 330; II, 45.) voZ.

Zamersky Filadelphus, a Moravian clergyman, who in 1593 published a large Protestant Postille (sermon book) in the Czech language. In it he speaks of the Anabaptists (Hutterites) and involuntarily gives them the testimonial that "through their economic capability and artistic skill in their crafts they distinguish themselves above all others so that herein they offer an almost astonishing spectacle." W.W.

Fr. Hruby, Die Wiedertäufer in Mähren (Leipzig, 1935) 36; ML IV.

Zandersfelde: see Pastwa.

Zandweer, a hamlet in the Dutch province of Groningen, where Leenaert (q.v.) Bouwens baptized 17 persons in 1563-65, and later two more. Since there was apparently no congregation at Zandweer the converts may have joined a neighboring congregation like Uithuizen (q.v.), Zijldijk (q.v.), or Huizinge (q.v.). voZ.

Zandt, Het ('t Zandt), a village in the Dutch province of Groningen, where Anabaptists were found as early as 1534, in the fall of which year Obbe (q.v.) Philips preached here. In the course of 1534 it was visited by the Münsterite emissaries Jacob (q.v.) Cremer and Antonius (q.v.) Kistemaker, and in January 1535 a tumultuous meeting was held on the farm "De Arke" near 't Zandt, where Harm(en) (q.v.) Schoe(n)maker was the leader; about a thousand persons were present, over 300 of whom were baptized by Schoenmaker. But soon after this revolutionary Anabaptism a more peaceful Mennonitism arose here. Leenaert (q.v.) Bouwens baptized five persons at 't Zandt in 1551-56 and later another three. Concerning the congregation there is not much information; it was small in membership and merged with the Zijldijk (q.v.) congregation before 1700. voZ.

P. G. Bos, "Groninger Wederdooper-woelingen in 1534 en 1535," in Ned. Archief voor Kerkgeschiedenis VI (1908) 1-17; BRN VII, 136, 362 f., 379; Kühler, Geschiedenis I, 144-47; Mellink, Wederdopers, 257-61; DB 1879, 6, 87; 1905, 91, 97; 1906, 31, 36; 1917, 126.

Zanten (Santen), Jacobus van (d. c1740), a physician at Haarlem, Holland, and in 1683-c1730 an elder of the Den Blok (Flemish) Mennonite congregation, was a conservative Mennonite who stressed the confessions of faith. He was a friend of Herman Schijn (q.v.). Besides some medical works van Zanten published a book on Socrates (1710); translations from English: John Milton, Paradise Lost under the title Paradys Verlooren (Haarlem, 1728), and John Gale Aanmerkingen op den Kinderdoop (Leiden, 1741); a theological study on the Apostles' Creed, entitled De Historie van het Symbolum oft Geloofsformulier der Apostelen (Haarlem, 1707, repr. Utrecht, 1711); and Oorzaken van't Verval der Christelyke Godvruchtigheid (Haarlem, 1717). Being unmarried he willed a considerable part of his property to the Haarlem congregation, which is still administered as the Jacobus-van-Zanten-fonds. voZ.

N.N.B.Wb. V, 1169; Blaupot t. C., Holland II, 30 f., 136; DB 1897, 166 f.

Zängerle, Jakob, an Anabaptist martyr, was executed in 1537 at Imbst, Tirol, Austria. (Beck, Geschichts-Bücher, 132.)

Zapff, Hauptrecht (1546-1630), a Hutterite Anabaptist, born in Sprendling, Hesse, joined the brotherhood in Moravia as a lad of fourteen. In 1594 he was made Diener des Wortes (minister), and for thirty years he was the secretary-clerk of the bishop. His major contribution was his work on the great chronicle of the Hutterites, the Geschichtsbuch, which Kaspar Braitmichel (q.v.) had begun to write in the 1570's and completed up to 1542. In the days of the Vorsteher Hänsel Kräl (q.v.), 1578-83, Zapff first copied the Braitmichel original (no longer in existence), most likely at the Neumühl (q.v.) Bruderhof, and continued it chronologically to 1591. This work was done apparently conjointly with the bishops, first with Hänsel Kräl and then with Claus Braidl (q.v.), more or less as Braitmichel had started it. Zapff and the bishops used the large archives at the Neumühl center. The title page of the Chronicle, as it still exists today, bears the name of Kräl and then the initials "H. Z." for the writer. At the end of Braitmichel's "Vorrede an den Leser" Zapff expressly signed also, as "continuer and worker on this book."

Zapff died in 1630 in Slovakia, at the age of 84. Five hymns were written by him, three now in the Lieder der Hutterischen Brüder, 846-49, and two in a hymn codex in Bratislava. R.F.

Zapff's share in the Chronicle is told by Zieglschmid, Chronik, xxiii-xxiv; Wolkan, Lieder, 241; ML IV.

Zaporozhe, formerly Alexandrovsk, located on the left bank of the Dnieper River in the Ukraine, 45 miles south of Dnepropetrovsk, below the Dneprostroi Dam, on the main railroad from Moscow to Sevastopol, has today a population of approximately 300,000. It is a significant industrial center with metallurgical plants and chemical works. Mennonites from the Chortitza (q.v.) settlement founded the village of Schönwiese (q.v.) near this city and soon developed a large-scale milling industry and factories which became the nucleus of its present-day industrial significance.

Among the early Mennonite firms of Schönwiese, now a part of Zaporozhe, were Lepp and Wallmann, A. J. Koop, Hermann Niebuhr, and Hildebrandt and Pries. The strategic location on the Dnieper River and the need for agricultural machinery speeded the rapid growth. The Lepp and Wallmann factory had an annual production of 900,000 rubles and the A. J. Koop factory of 610,000 (1911). The largest milling industry was Niebuhr & Co. After the Revolution the industries were nationalized and developed by the Soviets.

The first combines in Russia were produced by Mennonite engineers in former Mennonite factories of Zaporozhe. Peter Dyck, Gerhard Hamm, Kornelius Pauls, and others, mostly sons of Mennonite industrialists who had studied in Germany, started to build combines in 1925. (Hamm went to the United States to study American industries.) Their success was reported to the industrial headquarters in Moscow. In 1927 after a commission had examined the combines Kalinin himself bestowed the Order of Lenin on the Mennonite engineers and the director of the factory. From now on the "Kummunar" factory received priority till the output reached 10,000 per year. During the wave of exiles in 1933 the Mennonite engineers were sent into exile.

When Hitler's army invaded the Ukraine, the Mennonites who were working in large numbers in these industries were also evacuated. Miraculously some escaped this evacuation and came to North and South America after World War II. It can be assumed that some of the evacuated Mennonites have found their way back to Zaporozhe, although little information is available at this time. (See also Industry Among the Mennonites in Russia and Ukraine.) C.K.

"Mennonite Industry in Russia," Menn. Life X (1955) 21; Cornelius Krahn, "Agriculture Among the Mennonites of Russia," Menn. Life X (1955); D. H. Epp, "P. H. Lepp," Bote (Rosthern, 1928) Nos. 10-13.

Zaug, Hans, an Anabaptist minister of the canton of Zürich, Switzerland, one of "seven of the preachers and principal elders (Vorsteher) of the church [who] were apprehended, for whom special prisons were prepared; namely, Uly Bogart, Anthony Hinkelberg, Jegly Schleich, Hans Zoug, Uly Baumgarten, Christian Christians, and Rhode Peters, in Bern." Van Braght says of the occasion of this persecution: "The little flock of Christ having fled from the confines of Zurich to the regions of Berne, could at this time also there obtain no freedom, inasmuch as those of Berne, following the footsteps of those of Zurich, also undertook to lay hands on them, but especially on the shepherds and leaders of the church, in order that they might by this means, as it seems, cause the more terror among the innocent sheep and lambs of the scattered flock of Christ." They were kept at hard work on poor food, at first told they would be kept in prison for life, but later given a choice of three options: (1) to attend the state church, (2) to be perpetually banished to the galleys, or (3) to be executed. Van Braght reports no further knowledge of their fate, except that they were still in prison in 1659, nor does he know when they were arrested. (Mart. Mir. D 826, E 1124.)

H.S.B.

Zaunmayer, Ulrich (Gammelich), of Ansbach, Württemberg, Germany, defended himself very skillfully in a number of cross-examinations. He said he wanted to live apostolically if he were permitted to do so. One saw well that many good people were killed. He who teaches otherwise than Christ and His apostles have taught is a liar. He did not want to oppose the government. To him communion was a meal of commemoration (in John 16 Christ speaks about His flesh which was committed to the cross and not into His mouth). He would stick to that. He believed that if he ate of this bread in faith, he would not only have Christ's body and blood, he would have the entire Christ and the salvation of his soul. But that Christ's body is essentially here and climbs up and down from heaven, that he would commend to the wise men. He asked whether it would be right or wrong if four or five or six together were to observe the Lord's Supper in a house as the apostles did.

In a letter to Margrave George in May 1529 he remarked that the clergy had belabored him with all kinds of hair-splitting catch questions; he repeated his views on the Lord's Supper, and commented that the Jews were more mercifully treated than the Anabaptists: they were given more time to sell their property in order to leave the country. He asked the elector not to expel him. Finally he was ordered not to talk to anyone about the sacrament but to stick to his trade, otherwise he would be punished. There is a marginal note: he shall leave in a month. It is probable, but not certain, that Zaunmayer was a full Anabaptist. (TA Bayern I 163 f., 167, 181 f., 185, 190, 331; ML IV.) W.W.

Zaunring (Martyrs' Mirror, Zaunringerad; Loserth, Zaunried), Georg (Jörg or Juriaen) (d.1531 or 1538), an early Tirolean Anabaptist and co-worker with Jakob Hutter. He was born supposedly in Rattenberg (q.v.), and seems to have joined the Anabaptists at an early age. In 1528 he was actively working and baptizing both north and south of Bozen (Bolzano), in the center of the Adige (q.v.) Valley. In the remote villages of the Ritten Mountains he was fairly successful and became the treasurer (Säckelmeister) of the group. It must have been here that he met Hutter, who was likewise working for the Anabaptist cause along the Puster (q.v.), Adige, and Eisack valleys (see Tirol). Because of severe persecution, Hutter sent a large contingent of these newly converted brethren to Moravia, the "promised land," under the leadership of Zaunring, their preacher (Diener des Worts). In 1529 they arrived at Austerlitz (q.v.), where they gladly joined the brotherhood shepherded by Jakob Wideman (q.v.).

Unfortunately conflicts soon arose (see Reublin), and in 1530 the brotherhood split into two groups (Völklein): the Southwest Germans remained with Wideman and were henceforth known as the Austerlitz Brethren, while the Tiroleans went to Auspitz (q.v.), then an estate of the Abbess of Maria Saal (near Brno), where they began another Bruderhof with a total of 150 baptized persons supervised at first by both Zaunring and Reublin. The establishment of unconditional and full community of goods was, of course, new and by no means an easy affair. In that very first year (1530) it was discovered that Reublin had withheld a sum of money (which he had brought to Moravia) for emergencies (which act occurred more than once later on; see, e.g., Schützinger). Thereupon Reublin was expelled from the Auspitz group as a "false Ananias." This act received the approval of Hutter, who had come to Moravia in 1530 to look after the brotherhoods, their discipline, and their pastoral care. From now on Zaunring was the only preacher of the Auspitz group, which was growing steadily by the arrival of newcomers from Tirol.

But the peace was short-lived. The Hutterite chronicle tells the events of 1531 in great detail: Zaunring's wife had committed adultery with a certain brother Thomas Lindl, and of course that involved a delicate situation for the preacher. For a while he practiced "marital avoidance" (q.v., especially ME III, 487), but eventually he forgave his wife and took her back. For this reason the brotherhood excommunicated him, thus depriving themselves of their only spiritual leader. At their invitation, Hutter came from Tirol with his new co-worker Sigmund Schützinger (q.v.) and restored order and discipline, making Schützinger the new Vorsteher. Soon thereafter Zauring repented before the entire brotherhood and was accepted back into full membership. But not long afterward the Brethren sent him as a missionary into South Germany, in particular to Franconia. Here, in the bishopric of Bamberg, he was caught by the authorities and soon thereafter beheaded, thus becoming a martyr for his faith. The date is either 1531 or 1538.

We have from Zauring's hand two writings: (1) a brief but very fine, typically Anabaptist tract, Eine kurze Anzeigung des Abendmahles Christi, also called Ein Gespräch vom Abendmahl Christi, ein Dialog zwischen der Welt und einem Christen (published by Lydia Müller, Glaubenszeugnisse I, 144-48), and (2) Eine schöne Epistel an die Heiligen Gottes: "Wem Christus verheissen wird." This contains Zauring's motto: "In Gottes Lieb sollst für dich gan/ In Glauben keinen Zweifel han/ In Hoffnung auch nit abelan/ Vor deinem Gott in Demut stan" (Beck, 40 n). R.F.

Lydia Müller, Glaubenszeugnisse I (Leipzig, 1938) 143 ff.; Beck, Geschichts-Bücher, 39 ff.; Loserth, Anabaptismus; Zieglschmid, Chronik; Mart. Mir. D 33, E 440; ML IV.

Zealand Flanders (Zeeuws-Vlaanderen), since 1814 a part of the Dutch province of Zeeland (q.v.), which borders on Belgium. In the 16th-18th centuries Zealand Flanders, then usually called Staats-Vlaanderen, was governed by the States-General. From about 1567 a large number of refugees from Flanders, both Mennonites and Calvinists, fleeing persecution after the coming of Alva (see Alba), came to Zealand Flanders, some of them settling there and others moving northward. The Reformed synod of Walcheren (q.v.), which had charge of the Calvinists in Zealand Flanders, as late as 1647 decided to place a guard on the Belgian border to intercept the refugees and to try to win them to the Reformed Church and to prevent their reaching the Mennonite Church. This measure, however, was of little use. About 1630 some Mennonites who had remained in Belgium came secretly to Zealand Flanders, particularly to De Biezen (q.v.), near Aardenburg, for worship and to have their marriages performed by a Dutch Mennonite elder. A large number of well-known Mennonite families passed through Zealand Flanders on their way to Vlissingen, Middelburg, and Holland, and some Mennonite refugee families, e.g., Dyserinck and van Eeghen, stayed in this area a few generations, belonging to the Aardenburg (q.v.) or the Groede (q.v., Cadzand) congregation. (DB 1876, 82 f., 96-108; 1883, 93 f., 108-13; 1884, 114; 1897, 163.) vDZ.

Zedo, Nikolaus, of Bümplitz near Bern, Switzerland, was, after the execution of Wälti Gerber (q.v.), next to Hans Haslibacher the most important preacher of the Bernese Anabaptists. He is described as a man of about 30 years of age with a "pointed black little beard," a crippled hand, and usually dressed in gray trousers. In the Turmbücher (q.v.) he is often named as an Anabaptist preacher. According to his own statements, he came to the faith through Wälti Gerber. Even in his youth he was active as preacher and pastor. Cathrin Wenger confessed in December 1566 that she had been married in a field near Schorren (near Thun) by Nikli Zedo. Hans Tschanz made the same confession in 1567. Zedo held meetings in the forest near Röthenbach in the Upper Emmental, in Schliern near Köniz, at Seftigen, where Zedo preached and read from the book of Ezra. Zedo's influence extended as far as the canton of Solothurn. He is expressly described as the successor of Wälti Gerber. Almost always he held his meetings during the night for reasons of safety. Under torture Verena Schöni confessed in 1569 that she and her husband had been married two years previously by Nikolaus Zedo "at night time" in a woods along the Aar River near Kresen. He had admonished them out of the Scriptures and had joined their hands "in the name of the Holy Trinity." Near Eggwil in the Emmental Zedo also "passed out the Lord's Supper" in a forest. Furthermore Zedo confessed later before the court that he had held a meeting and baptized near Steffisburg in Eriz, and also likewise at Seftigen and between Stettlen and Bolligen. Later he had also baptized several persons in the Upper Emmental at the Schallenberg.

Such missionary activity and official acts of an Anabaptist like Zedo, who worked in wide circles and also in the neighborhood of the city of Bern, could not remain concealed from the council. The council finally found and arrested the "stiff-necked disobedient Anabaptist" in the region of Oberdiessbach near Thun c1575. Apparently some of the patricians in authority were shocked by this kind of bloody justice; for the Baron of Diessbach was fined 50 pounds for releasing Zedo from imprisonment. The sum of 100 pounds was now set upon the recapture of Zedo. Four men from the region of Steffisburg and Thun earned this money by taking him to Steffisburg; from there the bailiff took him to Bern, accompanied by two men. On Nov. 14, 1580, he was cross-examined on three points: (1) whether he would desist from preaching and baptizing and adapt himself to the Christian church; (2) whether he would be obedient to the Christian divinely ordained and established government; (3) at what places he had held meetings and preached, who had attended, and whom he had baptized.

After Zedo's confession he was declared guilty of disobedience to the Christian regulations and of having shown himself as a mobster and the leader of a seditious party and a false doctrine. He was therefore, on the basis of the Anabaptist mandates, condemned to death by beheading.

But this sentence was not carried out (presumably because of the opposition of some of the members of the council, or perhaps also because of public opinion), as is shown by this entry: on Nov. 29, 1580, his life was granted to him "out of grace and mercy by my gracious lords, councillors, and citizens in the hope of improvement; but he shall give a recantation at those places where he is cited and pay 200 pounds of fine and all the costs." On Dec. 4 Zedo was placed before the congregation in the cathedral at Bern. The court secretary read the record of recantation. Then Zedo was taken to the island, to be taken to Steffsburg on the next day to make his recantation before the congregation there and at other places. In that same night, however, Zedo escaped from the island. Beat Neuenschwander, who helped him escape, was fined 50 pounds. Nothing more is known about Zedo except that he "thereafter still did much harm." S.G.

S. Geiser, Die Taufgesinnten-Gemeinden (Karlsruhe, 1931); ML IV.

Zeeland, a Dutch province (1952 pop. 273,690, with c650 Mennonites) in the southeastern part of the Netherlands, consists of the territory of Zealand Flanders (q.v.), formerly called Staats-Vlaanderen, in 1814 added to Zeeland, and the following islands: Walcheren, South Beveland, North Beveland, Tholen, Sint Philipsland, and Schouwen-Duiveland. Anabaptism was found on Walcheren by 1534 (Middelburg, Veere, Arnemuiden) and at about the same time on Schouwen-Duiveland (Brouwershaven, Zierikzee), and Mennonite congregations developed here c1550 or earlier. But this early Anabaptist movement was not strong; the Zeeland congregations were considerably strengthened by the coming of Mennonites from Flanders, Belgium, from c1560, and particularly after 1567. Even before this stream of refugees entered Zeeland, there were connections between the Anabaptists-Mennonites of Zeeland and those of Flanders. In the 16th century it was usually not the elders of Holland who baptized in Zeeland, but those of Flanders. The emigrants from Flanders settled in some Zeeland towns, establishing new congregations or strengthening the churches they found there. Most refugees, however, moved on to such places as Rotterdam, Leiden, Haarlem, and Amsterdam, and also to Friesland, to Emden in East Friesland, and to Danzig in Prussia. A number of these Mennonite refugee families lived for two or three generations in Zeeland, and then moved northward, particularly to Haarlem and Amsterdam.

About 1600 the following Mennonite congregations were found in the province of Zeeland: Aardenburg, Groede (or Cadzand), Vlissingen, Middelburg, Veere, Goes, St-Maartensdijk, Zierikzee, and Brouwershaven. Of these congregations only Aardenburg, Vlissingen, Middelburg, and Goes are still in existence. About 1670 the total number of baptized members in Zeeland was perhaps c1245. This number was c900 in 1730, barely 195 in 1800, 376 in 1900, and 431 in 1958. The large decrease of members from c1680 and the dissolution of some congregations was caused partly by the intolerance of the States of Zeeland and of the local magistrates of some towns like Aardenburg, Middelburg, and Zierikzee, but mostly by the fact that the Mennonite refugees from Flanders who had settled as merchants in the Zeeland towns gradually moved to South or North Holland towns where they had better business opportunities.

It was at Middelburg in 1577 and soon after in the whole province of Zeeland that through the benevolence of Prince William I (q.v.) of Orange the Dutch Mennonites became officially exempted from the oath and military service. voZ.

J. W. te Water, Reformatie in Zeeland (1766); K. R. Pekelharing, "Geschiedenis der Hervorming in Zeeland," in Archief Zeeuwisch Genootschap VI (1866); Mellink, Wederdopers, 316-24; Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 428, 433-41, 1072; II, 2, Nos. 584, 589-91.

Zeeman, Wybe Pietersz (d.1759), a lay preacher in the Mennonite congregation of Heerenveen from 1736, was charged by the Reformed pastors with teaching Socinian (q.v.) doctrines, as were his co-preachers Wytze Jeens Brouwer (q.v.) and Pieke Tjommies (q.v.). Whereas Brouwer and Tjommies were suspended from their office by the governor of Schoterland on June 5, 1739, Zeeman consented to the (Reformed) anti-Socinian formulation and was again permitted to preach. voZ.

P. H. Veen, De Doopsgezinden in Schoterland (Leeuwarden, 1869) 34 f., 42, 65-71, 163 ff., 167, 169-72.

Zeerijp, a hamlet in the Dutch province of Groningen, the site of the meetinghouse and parsonage of the Leermens (q.v.)-Loppersum Mennonite congregation, built in 1835. Hence the Leermens-Loppersum congregation is also called Zeerijp. voZ.

Zeeuwse Sociëteit (Zeeland Conference). In September 1685 an attempt was made to found a Lamist (q.v.) Mennonite conference in the Dutch province of Zeeland (q.v.) in order to meet the increasing need for capable preachers in the churches. Middelburg took the initiative and invited the congregations of Cadzand, Zierikzee, Brouwershaven, and Aardenburg to support the plan. Vlissingen and Goes, both siding with the Zonists (q.v.), were not invited. As far as is known, after a first meeting of the Sociëteit, October 1685, the matter was dropped. (Inv. Arch. Amst. II, 2, Nos. 589-91.) voZ.

Zeeuws(ch)-Vlaanderen: see Zealand Flanders.

Zegers (Seghersz, Segersz), Herman (c1576-July 1667), living at Utrecht, Netherlands, owner of a tileworks, was a deacon and in 1639-63 a preacher of the Utrecht Mennonite congregation. In 1632 he signed the Dordrecht (q.v.) confession of faith in the name of the Utrecht congregation. In 1660 ff., when a conflict arose in the Utrecht church, Zegers held to conservative views, opposing Willem van Maurik (q.v.) and some co-preachers who sided with van Maurik. He was a descendant of the martyr Jeronimus (q.v.) Seghersz, and the ancestor of the Hovens (q.v.) family. (DB 1863, 130; 1916, 152; Inv. Arch. Amst. II, No. 2290.) voZ.

Zeggelen, van, a Dutch Mennonite family. Wilhelmus Josephus van Zeggelen (1811-79), a Roman Catholic, joined the Mennonites in 1848. He was a director of a printing shop at The Hague, Holland, and was known for his humorous poetry. Among his children were Marie Christine van Zeggelen (1870-1953), well-known Dutch novelist and dramatist, and author of children's books, and Constantijn Henri van Zeggelen (1878-1939), a lawyer at Amsterdam, twice a deacon in the congregation, trustee of the A.D.S., in 1914-39 a trustee of the Oranjeappel (q.v.) orphanage, and in 1924-39 a trustee of the Christina (q.v.) Stüchtung. vöZ.

Zehender, Stephan, an Anabaptist martyr of Pymensdorf, Switzerland, an aged man, was imprisoned in 1539 in the Oethenbach prison of Zürich "in a very damp and unwholesome place, . . . and fed on bread and water" for sixteen weeks, until his death. (Mart. Mir. D 815, E 1114 f.; ML IV.)

Zehentmayer, Martin (Marthi or Marthan Maler), was a Hutterite martyr, who stemmed from Langenmoosen near Inchenhofen in the Aichach district of Bavaria, Germany. He learned painting probably in the neighboring Augsburg. There he must also have joined the Anabaptists. In 1528 he was expelled from Augsburg and went to Schwäbisch-Gmünd. There he opened the door wide for Anabaptism. He is said to have baptized over 100 persons in chapels and private houses. Then the council became aware of him and in the middle of February they seized him and in succession 40 of his followers, including 19 girls and women. They were given only bread and water and kept in the towers around the city the entire summer and autumn. For 42 weeks Zehentmayer was in arrest. He was also cross-examined on the rack and confessed that he had wanted to have all things held in common. On Dec. 4, 1528, he was tried with several of his fellow believers. The council of Gmünd could risk this, in its confidence in the troops sent by the Swabian League. He was sentenced to execution by the sword. On Dec. 7, 1529 (Wolkan, erroneously 1531), the sentence was carried out outside the city.

Zehentmayer also wrote some songs: "Mit Freuden will ich singen" (Lieder, 48 ff.), and another with a companion, "Aus tiefer not schrein wir zu dir" (Ausbund with a different text; Lieder, 51). In addition these deal with the seven brethren: "Kürzlich hab ich mich besonnen" (according to Beck, 38, written by Peter Riedemann; Lieder, 53), "Wer Christo hier will folgen" (Lieder, 52), and "Aus herzlichem Muet und euffer kann ich nicht unterlan" (Lieder, 55), which was written by Andreas Ehrenpreis. G.Bos.

Beck, Geschichts-Bücher, 37 ff.; Lieder der Hutterischen Brüder (Scottsdale, 1941) 48-59; Wagner, "Die Reichsstadt Gmünd 1526-30," in Württembergische Vierteljahrshefte, 1884, 85 ff., 183; Wolkan, Lieder; idem, Geschicht-Buch; Mart. Mir. D 32, E 439 f.; ML IV.

Zehr is a Mennonite family name found primarily in Illinois and Ontario and in smaller numbers in Iowa, New York, Nebraska, Oregon, and other states. In 1957 eleven Zehrs were serving as Mennonite ministers, six of whom were in the Mennonite Church (MC), three in the Conservative Amish Mennonite, one in the Evangelical Mennonite, and one in a congregation in France. The family is Swiss in origin, but was represented among the Swiss Mennonite refugees in the Palatinate. Members of the Zehr family migrated to America in the 19th century and were prominent in A.M. circles. Peter Zehr (1809-98) came to America in 1838 and served as a minister in the East Zorra (Ont.) A.M. Church near Tavistock. Joseph C. Zehr (1822-1915) was ordained minister in Lewis County, N.Y., 1852, and later served in Ontario. Michael Zehr (1790-1880) served the A.M. Church in Lewis County, N.Y., as bishop. Peter S. Zehr (1867-1934), a grandson of the above Peter, was a minister in the East Zorra church. David D. Zehr (1864-1924) was born in Illinois and moved to Manson, Iowa, where he was ordained minister in 1902 and bishop in 1909. Jacob Zehr (1825-98), who settled in Illinois in 1848, served as a bishop in the Goodfield Mennonite Church. He was ordained minister in 1859 and bishop in 1863. Daniel Zehr (1849-1942) was born in Illinois and ordained a Mennonite minister in 1895. Jacob Zehr (1875-1929) was born in Illinois and was ordained minister in the Goodfield Mennonite Church in 1912. Michael S. Zehr (1872-1944) was bishop of the Pigeon River (Mich.) C.A.M. Church. Among the contemporary well-known ministers of this family are Harold Zehr, former minister of the East Bend Mennonite Church, Fisher, Ill.; Howard Zehr, bishop-pastor of the Prairie Street Mennonite Church, Elkhart, Ind.; and John David Zehr, instructor in the Goshen College Biblical Seminary. M.G.

Laura E. Farney and Julius Farney, Genealogies of Three Large Families (Farney, Virkler, Zehr) (Watertown, N.Y., 1933).

Zehr, Michael S. (1872-1944), born in Wellesley, Waterloo Co., Ont., the sixth of the seven children of Bishop Christian B. Zehr and Veronica. His great-grandfather, Bishop Michael Zehr, and family immigrated from Alsace to Lewis Co., N.Y., about 1833. On Nov. 29, 1894, he was married to Anna Zehr at Croghan, N.Y. In 1900 they moved to Huron County near Pigeon, Mich., and engaged in farming. Here their only child, Barbara, was born. In 1902 he became Sunday-school superintendent of the new Pigeon River A.M. congregation, was ordained to the ministry on Sept. 22, 1905, and bishop Nov. 30, 1930. He took an active interest in the organization of the Conservative Mennonite Conference, serving two terms as moderator and three as assistant. He served as a member of the Mission Board for 12 consecutive years, and for 11 years prior to his death was a member of the Executive Committee. He was used extensively in evangelistic meetings, Bible conferences, summer and winter Bible schools throughout the church, being deeply interested in missionary efforts. He died at Phoenix, Ariz., where he spent the last seven months of his life. He was buried at Pigeon. J.D.E.

Laura E. Farney and Julius Farney, Genealogies of Three Large Families (Farney, Virkler, Zehr) (Watertown, N.Y., 1933).

Zeising (Zeisingk; Czech, Cizek), Johannes. Hubmaier called him Jan Zeisinger. He was a monk; with two other monks, Michael Weisse and a certain Johannes of Breslau, he came to Leitomischel, having been expelled because of his Lutheran ideas. Zeising translated from Bohemian into German an epistle, which the Bohemian Brethren sent to King Ludwig of Bohemia and Hungary, dated 1525. In 1526 Zeising published Zwingli's book on the communion. Lukas, a well-known leader of the Brethren, thereupon published a reply to this book by Zwingli. It was his idea that the bread is the body of Christ and the wine His blood in a sacramental, spiritual, effective, and actual manner. Thereupon Zeising and Michael Weisse wrote a reply in Latin to Lukas, accusing him of backsliding. They said such doctrines are a denial of faith and a darkening of Christ's intention which He had when He instituted the communion. Zeising thereupon distributed a second book by Zwingli, Ueber die Schlüssel und die Beichte.

Zeising was repeatedly warned by leaders of the Bohemian Brethren and threatened by excommunication if he would not yield. With tears he thanked them for their kind and fatherly admonitions and promised to obey, but after only three days he declared that he could not act against his conscience and therefore requested that he be dealt with according to their regulations, that is, be excommunicated, whereby he solemnly promised not to oppose the Brethren all his life. And so he was excommunicated. Zeising soon afterward joined the Swiss Brethren.

Hubmaier dedicated his booklet Eine Form des Nachmahls Christi of 1527 to Burion Sobeck, of Kornitz, a former friend of Luther's, and sent it to Sobeck through "his dear brother Jan Zeisinger." As an Anabaptist Zeising suffered death at the stake at Brno on April 10, 1528, together with Thoman Waldhauser (q.v.). W.W.

J. T. Müller, Geschichte der Böhmisches Brüder I (Herrnhut, 1922) 426-28 f., 445; Wolkan, Geschicht-Buch, 45 note; ML IV.

Zeisset, Abraham (d. c1786), from 1749 an elder of the Immelhausen (q.v.) and Hasselbach (q.v.) Mennonite congregations in Baden, Germany. In 1783 (not 1773 as stated ME III, 14) he moved to Willenbach (q.v.) in Württemberg and served the Willenbach congregation until his death. He played a role in the strife that developed among the South German Mennonites to the left and the right of the Rhine in the 18th century. The occasion for the disputes was the activity of the strongly pietistic Mennonite preacher Peter Weber (q.v.) of Hardenberg. Weber's justified interest in awakening new life in the Mennonite congregations which were in many cases congealed in tradition met with opposition to the left of the Rhine under the leadership of Jakob Hirschler of Gerolsheim and a strongly conservative group; on the right of the Rhine from 1766 on, Abraham Zeisset was his most active opponent. Contemporary documents and letters about that quarrel indicate that Zeisset certainly had the honorable intention of preserving the old Anabaptist individuality and of representing it with conviction. On the other hand, it cannot be denied that he was guilty of personal obstinacy and unbrotherly attitudes.

The quarrel began when Zeisset deposed from their office on the strength of his own authority the preachers Georg and Abraham Bechtel, Jost Glück, and Jakob Krehbiel, who were spiritually alive and were friends of Peter Weber. This created great offense in the congregations of these men. They feared a division similar to the one caused by Jakob Ammann (q.v.). On Oct. 14 and 15, 1766, a conference took place at Rauhof in which three Swiss Mennonites participated besides the ministers of Baden and the Palatinate. Zeisset himself had invited them. The peace that resulted from this meeting was unfortunately of short duration. The newly awakened disunity was so severe that in 1767 the spring communion was not observed in North Baden.

In 1770 a new effort was made to bring about peace at a conference of elders and preachers on the Himmelhäuserhof (today Immelhäuserhof). Zeisset and other leaders of the dispute were set back from communion "impartially and without respect of person" for Easter of that year, temporarily removed from the office of preaching, and asked to apologize for their previous hostile attitude. But the strife was not yet completely removed. Zeisset even appealed to the civil authorities for help. Not until 1782 was the affair settled.

Abraham Zeisset was also for a time engaged in correspondence between the West Prussian and the South German congregations. But after he had offended other correspondents of the South German congregations and did not succeed in drawing the West Prussians to his side, he dropped out of this circular letter. His relationship with the Swiss Brethren on the whole remained clear, although they were by no means all on his side. In spite of the differing judgments concerning Zeisset, it must be reckoned as a service on his part that he contributed to the closer union between the South German Mennonites of that time and their Swiss brethren. P.S.

S. Geiser, Die Taufgesinnten-Gemeinden (Karlsruhe, 1931) 456 f.; Gem.-Kal., 1930, 139 ff.; 1932, 115; Müller, Berner Täufer, 213; D. L. Gratz, Bernese Anabaptists (Scottdale, 1953); ML IV.

Zeist, a town in the Dutch province of Utrecht, the seat of a Mennonite congregation, which was founded as a Kring (circle) on June 16, 1929, and organized as a congregation on March 23, 1931. From January 1921 until 1929 meetings were held at Zeist more or less regularly. A meetinghouse was built at Zeist in 1931, dedicated on Jan. 10, 1932, by Tj. Kielstra (q.v.). The first pastor of the Zeist congregation was C. Nijdam, serving 1933-46, followed by W. Mesdag 1946-.

The baptized membership, numbering c100 when the congregation was founded, was 339 in 1958. Church activities include two women's circles and a Sunday school for children. A home for the aged, called Schaerweyde (q.v.), was opened at Zeist on Oct. 13, 1951. vDZ.

Zelis (Zilis, Zielis, Sielis, Zylis), or Zelis Jacobs, a Mennonite elder, a native of Monschau (q.v.) in the Eiffel, Germany, was from c1554 active in Cologne (q.v.) and along the Rhine as far as Strasbourg (q.v.). This simple man, a charcoal burner, was a powerful apostle, evangelist, and leader of the church; he also trained ministers. In early 1557, when the Dutch elders Leenaert (q.v.) Bouwens, Dirk (q.v.) Philips, and Menno (q.v.) Simons had begun to practice rigorous banning (see Ban), Zelis, Lemken (q.v.), and other elders, then usually called High German (q.v.) Mennonites, found themselves unable to agree with them. Zelis and Lemken attacked particularly Menno, accusing him in a letter of 1557 (found in DB 1894) of leaving his former tolerant views to approve marital avoidance (q.v.). Menno answered in Grontlijeke Onderwys oft Be- richt van de Excommunicatie (1558) and, after a second letter of Zelis and Lemken, in Antwoort . . . op Zylis ende Lemmekens . . . Faemrooven (1560). In the meantime a large conference of German elders meeting at Strasbourg in 1557 opposed marital avoidance and overly strict banning. In 1559 Dirk Philips and Leenaert Bouwens traveled to South Germany to ban Zelis, Lemken, and the High Germans.

After 1559 there is no information about Zelis; he probably died in 1565. Zelis Jacobs is not identical with Zillis (q.v.) Leitgen Kremers, who stayed at Münster (q.v.) in 1534. vdZ.

BRN VII, 56, 61, 87, 220, 222, 527; Kühler, Geschiedenis I, 318-28; K. Vos, Menno Simons (Leiden, 1914) 135 f., 142 f., 191, 253 f.; C. Krahn, Menno Simons (Karlsruhe, 1936) 95-97; Rembert, Wiedertäufer, 458 f., 501 f.; DB 1894, 36 f., 47-53, 58, 60 f.; W. Bax, Het Protestantisme in het bisdom Luik I (The Hague, 1937) 302 f., note; Der Mennonit IX (1956) No. 1, p. 10.

Zell: see Cellarius.

Zell, Katharina, the wife of Matthäus Zell (q.v.), made a true shelter for religious exiles. Schwenckfelders, Waldenses, and Anabaptists were admitted into their house. She paid no attention to names, for as Christians "it is our duty to show love, service, and mercy to everyone; Christ our teacher taught us that." On the evening before his death, her husband urgently asked her to dedicate all her strength to the service of the poor and the persecuted. She was also to tell his assistants and his deacons that they should leave the Anabaptists and all of other faiths in peace, preaching Christ alone and gathering His sheep, not scattering them. Katharina Zell faithfully continued her Christian benevolent activity after her husband's death, although no capital was left at her disposal. Among other things she took into her home the wife of an Anabaptist preacher who had been executed in Liège and then provided a place for her as a worker in an institution for the poor. But when Ludwig Rabus, Zell's successor in office, discovered that an Anabaptist was occupying an important position in a public institution of the city, he insisted that she be removed. Deeply saddened Katharina Zell, an effective writer, on March 14, 1557, wrote "to the young, proud, zealous, who come to the altar too early and before their time" a moving letter defending the Anabaptists. "Now as to the poor Anabaptists, that you are so angry and wrathful about them, and the authorities everywhere chase them as a hunter urges his dogs upon a wild boar or a rabbit. They, after all, confess Christ with us on the main things in which we have parted from the papacy. . . . Shall one then persecute them and Christ in them whom they confess with zeal, and many of them have confessed unto misery, prison, fire, and water? Rather give yourselves the blame that we in our life and teaching are the cause of their separating themselves from us. He who does evil, him shall the government punish, but it shall not compel and govern faith, as you think. It [faith] belongs to the heart and the conscience and not to the external man." Those who were persecuting the Anabaptists, she said, should read the booklet written by Martinus Bellius to Duke Christoph of Württemberg after the death of Servetus in Geneva, in which he had collected the opinions of all the pious and the learned regarding the treatment of erring men called heretics. To be sure, the authorities believed that the Anabaptists would soon begin such a tyranny that the cities and villages would become empty. Strasbourg was not yet an example of mercy, sympathy, and acceptance of the wretched; there was still many a Christian in it whom the authorities would have liked to see driven out. Matthäus Zell had not done this, but had gathered the sheep instead of scattering them. Nor had he consented to such a policy except with a sad heart and great earnestness, since the theologians once complained to the authorities that he had said openly in the pulpit, "I take God, heaven, and earth as my witness on that day that I will be innocent of the cross and the expulsion of these poor people." NEFF, W.W.

T. W. Röhrich, Mitteilungen aus der Gesch. der Evang. Kirche des Elsasses III, 165-67 (Paris, 1855); W. Stähelin, Elsässische Lebensbilder aus dem 16. u. 17. Jahrh. (1869), 241-42; A. Hulshof, Geschiedenis van de Doopsgezinden te Straatsburg (Amsterdam, 1905) 43, note; ML IV.

Zell, Matthäus (1471-1541), the founder of the Protestant church in Strasbourg, the most popular preacher in the city, born Sept. 21, 1471, at Kaisersberg, Alsace, studied at the universities of Mainz and Erfurt, lived for a time in Italy, and served in the army of Maximilian I against the Swiss. In 1517 he became the rector of the University of Freiburg, and after the termination of this service became a priest at the cathedral in Strasbourg. He sided vigorously with the Reformation as a follower of Luther, and through his pious deeds and his speaking ability won great respect. He was the first to conduct the Mass in German in Strasbourg and to administer the Lord's Supper in both forms. Therefore he was subject to persecution by the Catholic authorities. In reply to the charge of heresy made against him by the Catholics he published his (originally in Latin) Christliche Verantwortung Matthes Zell von Kayzersberg . . . in 1523. He gave faithful support to the Reformers, such as Bucer, Capito, Hedio, and Pollio. In 1524 he married Katharina Schütz, and was therefore excommunicated; nevertheless he was kept in his office by the city magistrate. He was zealous in the care of the church and the school, always retaining a conciliatory mind; thus the Anabaptists, persecuted throughout the world, also found a defender in his wife (see Katharina Zell). Although Zell did not agree with the Anabaptists in all points, he opposed the use of violence in combating them. He declared from the pulpit that he was not in agreement with the regulations proposed by Bucer, Capito, and other officials and that he agreed with the principal doctrine of the Anabaptists, i.e., that the government in matters of faith was not justified in using measures of violence. Zell's doctrine of the communion also touched the Anabaptist view. According to Röhrich, he replied to Melancthon's question on this matter, stating that he did not believe that one received the body and blood of Christ in a communion substantially, essentially, really, and naturally; the devil had brought these words from hell. He said further that Christ had simply said, This is my body, this is my blood, and he would stick to that and not believe otherwise than Christ his Lord had spoken.

LOSERTH, W.W.

Ludwig Keller, Ein Apostel der Wiedertäufer (1885) 167; T. W. Röhrich, Mitteilungen aus der Gesch. der Evang. Kirche des Elsasses III, 132 f. (Paris, 1855); W. Stähelin, Elsässische Lebensbilder aus dem 16. und 17. Jahrh. (1869) 239; ML IV.

Zeller, Jörg, was very likely won for Anabaptism by Ludwig Haetzer. In his home in Ost-Krautheim, Bavaria, Zeller himself baptized several persons in 1527, one of them being Jörg Dorsch (q.v.). Dorsch later confessed that Zeller had said to him that no one could be saved without baptism, for Christ had said to His apostles: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. He who believes and is baptized shall be saved." Upon this presentation they had knelt down and Zeller had baptized them and had said: "In the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, arise from sins and sin no more; do penance." His brother Andres Dorsch and his wife, as well as Turbe Schnabel, had been baptized by Jörg von Passau (see Nespitzer). (ML IV. TA Bayern I) W.W.

Zellinger, Andreas, an Anabaptist of Halberstadt, Germany, was imprisoned in Rosenheim in 1578. In June of that year he was burned at the stake. His hymn, "Mit Gottes will Trauerns viel hab ich mein Liedlein zu singen," which he composed in prison, in its simplicity breathes religious inspiration and hope for heavenly peace and eternal joy. A poem, Täufers Sterbelied (Günther, 24), describes his martyr's death. W.W.

R. Günther, Der heilige Garten (Heilbronn, 1911) 24; Mennonitische Jugendwarte V, 146; ML IV.

Zelter, Kunigunde, an Anabaptist, a member of the Baierdorf (q.v.), Bavaria, Anabaptist congregation. With ten fellow believers she lay in the prison in Baierdorf. Before her judges she said that she had been baptized by Hans Hut; she could not believe that one is reborn through baptism. Baptism is only a sign that they accept a God-fearing life and should desist from sin. She said that Hut had further told them that one should give the government its due. (ML IV.) W.W.

Zemstvos: see Sanitätsdienst.

Zendingsraad, Doopsgezinde (Mennonite Missionary Council). Until 1957 the Dutch Mennonite Mission Association (q.v.) acted apart from the A.D.S. (q.v.), missions being a concern only of missionary friends. But the annual meeting of the A.D.S. on June 25, 1957, resolved to take over the work administered by the Zendingsraad. This means that the foreign missions of the Dutch Mennonites are now the affair of the entire brotherhood. W.F.G.

Zeper, a former Dutch Mennonite family (descended from Jan Dirx), from the 16th century at Leeuwarden, Friesland, where they were merchants and soap manufacturers. The Zepers were usually progressive and liberal, in the 18th century adhering to Collegiantism (q.v.); Pier Jansz Zeper was baptized by immersion at the Collegiant center at Rijnsburg (q.v.) in 1781. At the same time they were loyal members of the Mennonite church. Jan Dirks Zeper (1736-1801), married to Nieske Tichelaar, like his father operating a soap factory at Leeuwarden, a deacon in his home church, was an ardent Patriot (q.v.) and an opponent of the Reformed magistrates. In 1785 he founded a volunteers' corps and in 1787 he was the leader of a revolt against the Frisian government; after the failure of his military expedition Jan Zeper fled to Germany, settling on a large estate at Hahn in Holstein where he engaged in forestry and peat-digging. He was very wealthy. His son Pier Zeper (1761-1845), married first to Neeltje Kool and later to Fenna Hesselink, was the owner of a brewery, a soap factory, and other businesses at Leeuwarden. He too was an ardent Patriot; in 1796 he was banished for his political activity, but soon returned to Leeuwarden where he held high political offices, being a burgomaster of Leeuwarden in 1817. He was a deacon of the Leeuwarden congregation and 1806-36 treasurer of the Conference of Friesland (FDS). His son Dirk Zeper (Leeuwarden, 1803-81), married to Dirkje Bienema, also a manufacturer, was also a deacon at Leeuwarden, from 1837 treasurer of the FDS, and 1835-39 a trustee of the A.D.S. He served as burgomaster of Leeuwarden 1865-71. Other members of this family were Sybrand Allard Waller Zeper (1874-1937), State Archivist at Leeuwarden 1924-35, and Jacobus Waller Zeper, 1903-d.33 a trustee of the Haarlem Mennonite Church. vdZ.

N.N.B.Wb. IX, 1311 f.; Encyclopedie van Friesland (Amsterdam, 1958) 714 f.

Zerotin (Zierotin; in Hutterite spelling, Scherotin), a noble Czech family which flourished in the 16th and early 17th centuries, owning large estates in Moravia and Bohemia. Some of its members admitted the Hutterites to their domains and protected them in times of adversity against royal and imperial oppression.

The ancestral home of the Zerotins lies in northern Moravia, from where they expanded to other parts of the country. They adhered strictly to the teachings of John Hus (d.1415); during the 16th century most of them were members of the Bohemian Brethren (q.v.), called Unitas Fratrum, and were among the most ardent supporters of the Brethren, respected by them for their learning, devotion, and generosity.

In the 16th century the family was divided into three main branches: (a) Frederick of Zerotin (d. 1598), of the branch residing in Napajedl, Moravia, rose to prominence about the middle of the century, and became the most important personality of the Moravian nobility. He served in various capacities under three Hapsburg rulers: Ferdinand I, Maximilian II, and Rudolphus II. He distinguished himself in the wars against the Turks, and in 1594-98 held the highest office in the provincial government of Moravia, that of governor (Landeshauptmann), representing the crown in that province. By his first marriage in 1569 he acquired the manorial estate of Seelowitz (Czech, Zidlochovice) in southern Moravia, and in 1574 purchased also the smaller estate of Pausram (Pouzdrany) to round up his possessions. Toward the Anabaptists he was most kindly disposed, and at one time (1589) not less than eight Bruderhofs existed on his possessions. He died childless in 1598, and his property was divided among his relatives.

(b) Bartholomew of Zerotin (d.1569), of another branch of the family, owned land along the Moravian-Hungarian boundary. He purchased the boroughs of Lundenburg (Breslau) with several villages, including Billowitz, c1530. After his death the estate passed on to his son John the Younger, and in 1582 to John's son, Ladislav Velen, then still an infant but destined to a leading role in the political life of Moravia. Ladislav Velen received a careful education, studied abroad, and traveled extensively, becoming broad-minded and tolerant. He supported the Hutterites, who always praised him as their great friend. In 1589 there were on his lands not less than ten Bruderhofs. He participated actively in the rebellion of the Protestant nobles against the Hapsburgs and ardently supported the candidacy of the Count Palatine Frederick V to the crown of Bohemia. Under this new king (1619-20) Ladislav Velen headed the provincial administration of Moravia (1619-21). After the collapse of this rebellion he left his homeland to organize campaigns for its reconquest from the Hapsburg rulers. His activities were supported by other Protestant exiles but ended eventually in complete failure. He died somewhere in Poland in 1638.

(c) John the Elder, of another branch of the family in southwestern Moravia, attended one of the schools of the Unitas Fratrum, and for some time had the learned bishop of that church, John Blahoslav, as his mentor. John the Elder's loyalty and munificence to the Unitas could hardly be surpassed. Among other things he sponsored the translation of the Old Testament into Czech by a group of scholars. Together with Blahoslav's translation of the New Testament the complete Czech Bible was printed (in 6 volumes) at John's estate of Kralice in 1579-93, and is therefore commonly called the Kralice Bible. In 1562 John purchased the estate of Rossitz (q.v.) (Rosice), well known also as one of the earliest Anabaptist settlements.

After John's death his oldest son, Charles (Karl) the Elder (1564-1636), took over a large portion of the family domain, leaving the rest to his younger brother John Divis (sometimes called John Dionysius). Charles resided first at Rossitz and later at Prerau (Prerov). He was considered one of the wealthiest nobles of Moravia. He spent his formative years abroad, partly in Calvinist schools and partly in royal courts, including that of Elizabeth of England, but remained loyal to the Unitas Fratrum. Well known is his correspondence with leading Reformed theologians in Geneva and Basel. He was respected by friends and foes alike for his learning, personal integrity, and tolerant spirit. For many years he held a seat in the highest provincial tribunal, and served as governor of Moravia 1608-15. Unlike his cousin Ladislav Velen, Charles hesitated to join the ranks of the anti-Hapsburg faction, anticipating a collapse of the Protestant revolt of 1618-20. After the defeat of the Protestant troops at the White Mountain, (1620) he was exempt from trials, confiscations, and fines. Although living in an awkward position, he nevertheless made several interventions on behalf of the Anabaptists who in 1622 were banned from Moravia and hard pressed by the victorious Catholic party (see Counter Reformation). In 1627 Charles left his homeland and settled in Silesia, but as his health declined he was granted permission by Ferdinand II to return to his castle in Prerau in 1633. Three years later, in October 1636, he died there.

Charles' brother John Divis had inherited the manorial estate of Seelowitz from his uncle Frederick and held it until his death in 1615. His attitude to the Anabaptists was just as friendly as that of Frederick, so that under his administration their prosperous communities suffered no serious damage in spite of the rising political tensions and the growth of the Catholic Church (see Moravia).

O.O.

* * *

The Hutterite Chronicle mentions the different members of the Zerotin family not less than 16 times, testifying always to their kindness and protection in the face of the encroaching power of the Hapsburgs and the Counter Reformation in Moravia. They are mentioned for the first time in 1545, when a Bruderhof was established at Bartholomew's Lundenburg estate and another at Napajedl. The last record (1624) applies to Karl von Zerotin, who tried unsuccessfully to retain the Brethren in his service in spite of the expulsion order of 1622. During the devastating Turkish Wars Frederick of Zerotin tried in vain to convince the imperial treasury (Hofkammer) in Vienna (1596) that the Brethren were not able to pay (or to "loan") the government all the money asked for. No wonder the Anabaptists deeply mourned the death of Frederick in 1598, whom they called "our Fritz."

The Bruderhofs located on the estates of the different branches of the Zerotin family (in 1589 a total of 18 colonies) were as follows: Altenmarkt near Lundenburg 1545, Bisentz 1545, Durdenitz 1559, Gostal (from 1559 a Zerotin possession), Eibis or Meubes (Czech, Eivany or Ivany), Lundenburg 1545, Napajedl 1545, Neudorf near Lundenburg 1570, Nikolschitz 1570, Nusslau, Pausram 1574, Pilowitz 1545, Pohrlitz 1581, Pribitz, one of the largest Bruderhofs of the Hutterites, 1565, Rampersdorf 1545, Rossitz (from 1562 a Zerotin possession), Waczenowice 1571, Welka-Hulka (or Holka) 1560. (See Hutterian Brethren, and maps ME II, 858-60.)

R.F.

Peter von Chlumecky, Carl von Zierotin und seine Zeit, 1564-1615, 2 vv. (Brno, 1862); Frantisek Hruby, Ladislav Velen ze Zerotina (Prague, 1930); Otakar Odložilík, Karel starší ze Zerotina (Prague, 1936); Beck, Geschichts-Bücher, 322; ML IV.

Zeugnis der Schrift, a 16-page 6 x 9 inch (several issues of larger format) monthly published by the Herbert (Sask.) Bible School (MB). The first issue, September 1924, contained the catalog of the Bible School. Beginning with November 1925 the journal was published by the Rundschau Publishing House, Winnipeg, Man. William J. Bestvater, the principal of the Bible School, served as editor until publication ceased in December 1929, assisted by A. H. Unruh, principal of the Winkler Bible School, 1925-29. In July 1944 Bestvater resumed the publishing of Zeugnis der Schrift as a 12-page mimeographed monthly. He also published an English edition, Witness of the Word, a 12-page monthly, with a few exceptions. Both were written and produced by the author at 6908 Park Drive, Bell, Cal., to present a "prophetic" interpretation of the Scriptures. The last German and English issues of the paper found in the BeCL are dated December 1947. C.K.

Zeugnisse von Christo, a 4½ x 6¾ inch 36-page monthly, edited and published by Jakob and Abraham Kroeker at Spat, Crimea, Russia, first issue January 1901. Two issues are in GCL (January and February 1901); the further history is unknown. The editors announced the periodical as a "collection of sermons," one to be printed each month, each to be "by a brother and worker in the work of the Lord." The first number contained a full sermon by Jakob Friesen, preacher in Rückenau, on Rom. 1:16, plus an extracted sermon by F. L. Meyer on I Cor. 9:27; the second contained a sermon on Rom. 6:23 by Elder David Dürksen and one by C. H. Spurgeon. The agent for America was J. F. Harms of Medford, Okla. Twenty sermons were collected and published in one volume entitled Zeugnisse von Christo.

The BeCL has a volume with nine monthly installments containing two to three sermons each by Jacob Friesen, F. L. Meyer, David Dürksen, Jacob Kröker, Spurgeon, Johann Fast, F. B. Meyer, E. H. Hopkins, Isaak Regehr, Viebahn, Abr. Wall, J. Hudson Taylor, J. G. Kargel, and J. Reimer. H.S.B.

Zevenhuizen, a hamlet in the Dutch province of South Holland, formerly the seat of a Flemish Mennonite congregation, which in 1664 sided with the Zonists (q.v.). The congregation was small in membership and the pulpit usually vacant. Shortly after 1713 it died out. vdZ.

Blaupot t. C., Holland I, 330, 341; II, 43; DB 1896, 48; 1918, 69.

Ziadowitz (Czech, Zadowice), in the 16th century a manorial estate in Moravia where there was a Hutterian Bruderhof: see Schadowitz.

Ziegler (Zeigler, Zigler), a Mennonite family of Swiss origin. The name was formerly prominent in the Franconia Mennonite Conference (MC), and found also among the Mennonites and Amish Mennonites in Lancaster and Butler counties, Pa., and in eastern Ohio. Zieglers have also lived in Fulton County, Ohio, and in Cass County, Mo. Immigrant Michael Ziegler (c1680-c1765) was born in Germany, migrated to America before 1717, settling in Perkiomen Twp., now Montgomery Co., Pa., and was affiliated as a minister with the Skippack congregation (q.v.). He was one of the subscribers to the Dordrecht Confession of Faith in 1725. His son Andreas (c1707-c97), a son-in-law of Preacher Dielman Kolb, was ordained preacher in 1746 and bishop in 1762; he also served in the Skippack congregation and preaching circuit. He and Bishop Abraham Swartz deposed Christian Funk from his office of preacher and bishop in 1778 for Funk's favorable attitude toward the American Colonies during their rebellion against the British Crown. Andreas Ziegler was one of the three signers and possibly chief author of a letter of March 1, 1773, from Skippack to Holland, giving much valuable information on the Pennsylvania Mennonites. (See MQR III, 1929, 225-34 for the text of the letter.) The Ziegler family has also played a major role in the life and history of the Church of the Brethren. J.C.W.

Ziegler, Dorothea: see Frölichin.

Ziegler, Georg, a tailor of Strasbourg, who associated with the Anabaptists and gave them hiding places and lodging, confessed that he had done it at Capito's request. "He is a suspicious and seditious man. He has composed his doctrines in rhyme and was early an adherent of Hans Denk."

T. W. Röhrich, "Zur Geschichte der strassburgischen Wiedertäufer in den Jahren 1527 bis 1543," Ztscht für die Hist. Theologie (1860) 34; ML IV.

Zieglischmid, A. J. Friedrich (1903-50), philologist and editor of Hutterite literature. Born in Plauen, Germany, he came to America in 1922; he became professor of Germanic linguistics at Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., and at the time of his sudden death was professor at the University of Akron, Ohio. In 1938, during a trip to Europe, he discovered Hutterite manuscripts in Slovakia and Hungary, welcomed by him as documents of early New High German. Some of the texts thus collected (epistles) he published later in the MQR (1941, 42 and 43) in a letter-perfect edition; in 1940 he published also a lengthy essay on the Hutterites under the title, "Die ungarischen Wiedertäufer bei Grimmelshausen" (Zeitschrift für Kirchengeschichte LIX, 1940). Soon thereafter he decided to visit the present-day Hutterites in South Dakota in search of similar linguistic material. To his joy he "discovered" there the original of the Greater Chronicle (and later also the Smaller Chronicle). Since the Volkan edition of 1923 was exhausted, the Brethren asked him to undertake a new edition, this time—upon his suggestion—in a letter-perfect form. In 1943 Die älteste Chronik der Hutterischen Brüder appeared, a volume of 1200 pages, with glossary, bibliography, maps, and ample, valuable footnotes, now an indispensable tool for Anabaptist research, published by the Carl Schurz Foundation in Philadelphia. Four years later, in 1947, the Klein-Geschichtsbuch der Hutterischen Brüder followed, a volume of 800 pages, in modernized German, likewise with full scholarly apparatus, issued by the same publisher. Up to the year 1802 Zieglischmid could use Johannes Waldner's (q.v.) text, but for the years 1802-1947 he had to find his own way, using an amazing variety of unknown or little-known material of great value, collected in part during many visits at the Bruderhofs of Canada and South Dakota. Next, Zieglischmid set out to produce a new critical edition of Die Lieder der Hutterischen Brüder (first edition at Scottdale, 1914), a tremendous undertaking covering more than 4,000 typewritten sheets. His sudden lamentable death cut short his endeavors; the manuscript is still awaiting publication (deposited in GCL).

Starting as a philologist knowing little of the church-historical significance of his subject, Ziegl-schmid very soon became so intensely interested in the life and fate of the Brethren that all his later work (after 1940) became truly a work of love and dedication. The Hutterites responded warmly to this service and acknowledged it publicly by a letter printed in the Klein-Geschichtsbuch (773).

Other publications by Zieglschmid include "The Hutterians on the American Continent," German-American Review VIII (1942); and "An Unpublished 'Hausbrief' of Grimmelshausen's Hungarian Anabaptists," Germanic Review XV (April 1940).

R.F.

R. Friedmann, "A. J. F. Zieglschmid, an Obituary," MQR XXIV (1950) 364 f.

Zielen-weide der Godvruchtige, of Verzameling van Geestelyke Lieder (Groningen, 1741), a Dutch hymnal containing a preface by G. T. St., and 271 hymns without notes, on 706 pages. vbZ.

Zierikzee, a town on the island of Schouwen-Duiveland in the Dutch province of Zeeland (1947 pop. 6,964, with 13 Mennonites), was formerly the seat of a Mennonite congregation. Both Galenus (q.v.) Abrahamsz and Pieter Cornelisz Plockhoy (q.v.) were natives of Zierikzee. Anabaptism arose here as early as 1534; in 1535 Adriaen (q.v.) Aersen suffered martyrdom at Zierikzee, and on Sept. 4, 1536, four Anabaptists were executed here—Adriaen (q.v.) Jorisse, Pieter (q.v.) Gerritsz, Janneken (q.v.) Mels, and Jan (q.v.) Jansze; Adriaen (q.v.) Cornelisse was executed at Zierikzee in 1537. According to K. Vos all these martyrs were revolutionary Anabaptists. Paulus (q.v.) Harrouds died as a martyr at Zierikzee in 1540. None of these victims were natives of Zierikzee; they had come to spread Anabaptist doctrines. The information found in the sentence of Adriaen Cornelisse that he had conversed with many persons in Zierikzee and distributed "many books, full of great errors and heresies" shows that there was also an evangelical Anabaptist movement among the citizens of Zierikzee. Soon after this a small congregation may have arisen; Leenaert (q.v.) Bouwens baptized only two persons here. But an influx of Mennonite refugees from Flanders, Belgium, c1574 strengthened the Zierikzee congregation. Dirk (q.v.) Andries had shortly before been the last martyr to die at Zierikzee. About 1600 the baptized membership stood at c100 and the church was active. In 1567, after the Flemish-Frisian quarrels had seriously harassed the Dutch Mennonite brotherhood, the Zierikzee congregation as an exception refused to side with either the Flemish or the Frisians, preferring "to stand still," i.e., to be neutral. They published the booklet Christelijcke Proeve (q.v.) in 1570 to explain their neutrality, and also to admonish the Flemish and the Frisians to peace and love, insisting on the unity of the church. They were called "Stilstaanders" (q.v.) and were banned by both branches. The broad views and real Christian principles of the Zierikzee church may have been strengthened by Valerius (q.v.) de Schoolmeester, who for half a year in 1564 had lived at Zierikzee. At first the congregation was disturbed by the Reformed pastors, and on Sept. 4, 6, and 23, 1609, religious disputations were held at Zierikzee between a Reformed pastor and the Mennonite elders Cornelis de Kuyper (q.v.), Jan van der Voort (q.v.), and François de Knuyt (q.v.). In 1632 Anthonis Cornelisz and Pieter Jansz Timmerman signed the Dordrecht (q.v.) confession in the name of the Zierikzee congregation. In 1664 after the Lammerenkrijgh (q.v.), it wished to recognize both the Lamists (q.v.) and the Zonists (q.v.) as Christian brethren, though its sympathy was mostly with the Lamists.

Among the membership in the 17th-19th centuries the following family names are found: van der Sluys, Ta(c)k, Kleeuwens, Ammiraal, de Blo(c)k, den Boer, van der Kolk, van der Wissel, Hemeryck. Only a few ministers' names have come down: the capable François de Knuyt was its elder in the early 17th century; Anthonis (Tonis) Cornelisz Timmerman, obviously his successor, was still active in 1645. Elder Marinus Kleeuwens is named c1700, and the last ministers were Anne Thomassen 1722-d.27, Willem van Gulick 1728-d.61, and Samuel Adriaensz Tack 1765-d.1808. Concerning the membership information is very scarce: in 1750 there were some 50 baptized members, in 1808 only 13. In 1727, 1733, and 1736 the congregation liberally contributed to the relief of the Prussian Mennonites.

After the death of Samuel Tack in 1808 no new pastor was called. For a few years the pastors of Middelburg and Goes held occasional services here. By 1820 the congregation had dissolved. vbZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 214, 1164, 1175, 1180, 1996; II, Nos. 1261, 1267, 2367-91; II, 2, Nos. 578 f., 584, 587, 589, 592, 677; Blaupot t. C., Holland I, 24, 28 f., 124 f., 192; II, 42, 101, 229, 231; Mellink, Wederdopers, 167, 223f., 316 f., 323; H. W. Meihuizen, Galenus Abrahamsz (Haarlem, 1954) 5-20; Naamlijst 1810, 83 f.; DB 1864, 122; 1876, 67; 1897, 106; 1907, 165, 167, 168, 169; 1912, 36, 38; 1917, 172.

Zierikzeeërs: see Stilstaanders.

Ziffersystem (Numerical Musical Notation). Thousands of friends of the chorale and the hymn today still read music from numerical notes, which are used to some extent in Germany, France, and Holland. The most loyal and most numerous adherents of this number system, however, were the Mennonites in Russia. From here the system was carried by the various migrations to the United States and Canada and recently (1922 ff.) to Paraguay, Mexico, and Brazil.

According to The Story of Notation by C. Willem, Souhaitty, a Franciscan monk of Paris, suggested in 1677 that the figures 1 to 7 be used instead of ut, re, me, fa, sol, la, se and that points be added to locate their position on the staff.

In Rousseau's system and in Raymond's work of 1824 dots above and below the figures were to locate the note in the octave; but this was apparently found inadequate. Then Jacob, a French violinist, advised in 1769 that the staff without a signature should be used and numbers be used instead of notes. Other contributors to the method were Pierre Galin (1786-1821), Aimé Paris (1798-1866), and Emile Chevé. Of all these pioneers Rousseau was perhaps closest to the realization of this idea, a practical, easily learned system. It was developed in Germany by Bernhard Christian Ludwig Natorp (1772-1836), a theologian, who made it acceptable for singing. In 1813 Natorp used the figures 1 to 7 for the steps of the scale, indicating the location of the note on the staff by placing a single line under, on, or over it, and using a zero as a rest, and indicating length by adding dashes, dots, and commas. His work went through five editions in Germany. Of his works the following can be mentioned: Ueber den Zweck und die Einrichtungen des Melodienbuches für den Gemeindegesang (1822) and Ueber den Gesang in den Kirchen (1817).

The only Mennonite songbook using numerical notation is the one edited by Heinrich Franz for the Mennonite churches of South Russia, printed at Leipzig, Germany, 1860 and 1880. Five editions were printed in America: two at Elkhart, Ind., 1878 and 1918, and three in Manitoba, the last in Altona in 1953. (ML IV.) J.P.C., E.H.B.

Zijbrandt Claesz, an Anabaptist executed at Amsterdam, Holland, on May 14, 1535. Zijbrandt, a blacksmith of Alkmaar, a follower of Jan (q.v.) van Geelen, had participated in the siege of the Amsterdam town hall on May 10-11, 1535. He was put to death in a brutally cruel manner. (Grosheide, Verhooren, 63 f.) vDZ.

Zijldijk, a hamlet in the Dutch province of Groningen, the seat of a Mennonite congregation, formerly belonging to the Groningen Old Flemish branch. The congregation existed from about 1550; Leenaert (q.v.) Bouwens baptized eight persons here (possibly only two, the six others having been baptized at 't Zandt, q.v., a village about four miles south of Zijldijk). The Zijldijk meetinghouse, dating from 1791, is a fine specimen of the old barn type. The membership was always small: c130 in 1710, 89 in 1733, 33 in 1767, 13 in 1802, 62 in 1861, 83 in 1900, 39 in 1926, 65 in 1958. Most of the members live in the villages surrounding Zijldijk. On Nov. 11, 1686, the congregation was severely struck by a flood, seven adults and fourteen children of members perishing in the waters; much livestock was lost. Among the old family names in this congregation are Dijkema, Eendhuizen, Rengers, Doornbos, Huizinga, Coolman, and Gorter.

Until 1804 the Zijldijk church was served by lay preachers chosen from the members. In that year the first outside minister was called: A. S. Cuperus, serving 1804-d.12, followed by Simon Gorter 1813-56. The first minister educated at the Amsterdam Mennonite seminary to serve here was A. Hermansz ten Cate, serving 1856-66, followed by S. Cramer 1866-70, I. H. Bocke 1870-72, L. T. Gotingel Vinnes 1873-73, A. Mulder 1874-88, R. Kuiken 1891-93, D. Haars 1895-1902, A. de Vries Mzn 1903-6, D. Attema 1907-9, S. H. N. Gorter 1910-12, W. J. Hilverda 1913-16, H. Bussemaker 1917-24, N. van der Zijpp 1926-28, W. Mesdag 1929-34, Th. van der Veer 1934-39, Miss M. Knot 1939-46, and M. J. J. Gaaikema 1947-. Church activities are a women's circle, Sunday school, and a young members' group. vDZ.

Blaupot t. C., Groningen I, 52, 87, 127, 140, 142, 197, 238; II, 225; DJ 1840, 42; DB 1861, 154; 1872, 2; 1879, 6; 1900, 122.

Zijpe, a polder in the northern part of the Dutch province of North Holland, reclaimed in 1553, but afterwards often struck by floods, and practically uninhabitable before 1623. Soon after this there were four Mennonite congregations on this polder: (a) Nieuwe-Zijpe, or Wieringerwaard; (b) Oude-Zijpe near Petten, also called Zuid-Zijpe, or de Mennistenbuurt; (c) Oudesluis, or Noord-Zijpe, and (d) on the Ruigeweg, or Schagerbrug. The (a) Nieuwe-Zijpe congregation merged with Barsingerhorn (q.v.) before 1660. (b) Oude-Zijpe was a Flemish congregation, which was represented at the Flemish conference at Haarlem in 1649 by Pieter Cornelis and Jochem Gillis. Later it belonged to the Zonist (q.v.) conference. This congregation had a meetinghouse at de Mennistenbuurt, which was used until 1869, when a church was built at Burgervlotbrug. In 1840 it numbered 88 baptized members and 78 in 1861. It was served by untrained preachers until 1837, the last of whom was Simon Grin 1785-d.1837. The first minister educated at the Amsterdam seminary to serve here was G. Vissering 1837-42, followed by J. Koning 1844-d.48, Taco Kuiper 1849-50, K. O. Feickens 1850-57, S. J. Andriessen 1857-65, J. P. van der Vegte 1866-68, and J. Bakker 1868-73. After the pulpit had been vacant for five years, it was resolved to merge with the (c) Oudesluis congregation.

The (c) Oudesluis congregation, as well as the (d) Ruigeweg (Schagerbrug) church, which had merged into the Noord-Zijpe congregation before 1647, was Waterlander. It had a meetinghouse at Oudesluis (there was possibly also a meetinghouse on the Ruigeweg near Schagerbrug). The membership of this congregation numbered 77 in 1835 and 99 in 1861. It was served by lay preachers until 1829. The first trained minister of Noord-Zijpe was H. G. Coster, serving 1831-36, followed by J. Bodisco 1837-40, H. C. Dronrijp Uges 1843-47, M. van Geuns 1847-50, A. K. Hovens Greve 1850-51, A. S. Hoitsema 1851-53, and H. U. H. Bouman 1854-78.

The union of (b) Oude-Zijpe (Mennistenbuurt) and (c) Oudesluis (Noordzijpe) came about in 1878; then it was resolved to call the united body the Zijpe congregation, to use the two meetinghouses in Oudesluis and the one in Burgervlotbrug, to abandon the parsonages of Oudesluis and Mennistenbuurt, and to buy a house at Schagerbrug in the center of the congregation to be used as a parsonage. The Oudesluis meetinghouse was remodeled in 1906. Pastors of the Zijpe congregation were: K. Gorter 1879-84, H. van Calcar 1886-1903, C. Vis Jz 1906-9, L. G. Holtz 1909-14, M. Huizinga Jr 1914-18, and B. van der Goot 1919-24. The pulpit being vacant then, an arrangement was made with the neighboring church of Barsingerhorn that the pastor of this congregation should also take charge of Zijpe. Noord- en Zuid-Zijpe together numbered c180 baptized members at the merger of 1878, 157 in 1900, 108 in 1926, and only 40 in 1958. There is a ladies' circle. vDZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 510, 896, 1187; II, 2472-74; Blaupot t. C., Holland I, 47, 252; II, 203, 205; DB 1870, 181; 1879, 141; 1906, 195.

Zijpe, Nieuwe: see Wieringerwaard.

Zijpp, van der, a Dutch Mennonite family, originally from Lippenhuizen (q.v.) in Friesland, from where Wytse Atses moved to Warns (q.v.) about 1745. At Warns this family lived for many generations, all members being farmers until recent times, and often deacons of the church. Wytse Atses was a preacher of the Gorredijk-Lippenhuizen congregation 1726-45 and probably also at Warns, though the years of his serving are unknown. His son Atse Wytses (1725-1808) was a (lay) preacher of the Warns congregation from 1750 until his death. He was a somewhat conservative but capable and assiduous leader, moderator of the Zuiderklasse (q.v.). He was nominated curator of the University of Franeker in 1796, when there was question of appointing a Mennonite professor of Theology at this university. He too was a farmer. His children took the family name of van der Zijpp in 1810.

Wietze Sierds van der Zijpp (1831-1915) was a deacon of the congregation at Molkwerum for 42 years. Pieter N. van der Zijpp (1859-1924) was for many years treasurer of the Warns congregation and his brother Jacob N. van der Zijpp (1869-1949) a deacon at Hindeloopen. Nanne (Jacobs) van der Zijpp (b. April 2, 1900, at Warns) was educated for the ministry at the university and Mennonite seminary at Amsterdam and served as pastor at Zijldijk 1926-28, Joure 1928-40, Almelo 1940-46, and Rotterdam 1946-. Since 1946 he has taught Mennonite history in the Amsterdam Mennonite Seminary, since 1954 has been a lector (professor) of the Amsterdam University. His chief publication was the Geschiedenis der Doopsgezinden in Nederland (Arnhem, 1952); he is assistant editor of the MENNONITE ENCYCLOPEDIA, being responsible for the Dutch part. vdZ.

N.N.B.Wb. V, 1186 f.; Naamlijst 1731, 37; 1743, 31; 1808, 78; Blaupot t. C., Friesland, 186, 221, 363; DB 1874, 96, 113; 1900, 42 f., 47, 60; 1901, 94-106, 114 f.; De Zondagsbode XXII (1908-9) No. 37.

Zilles Leitgen Kremers, an early Anabaptist leader, who was in Münster (q.v.) in 1534, sent from there on Dec. 31, 1534, as an emissary to 's Hertogenbosch, Netherlands, but captured at Jülich (q.v.), is not identical with the Elder Zelis (q.v., Zillis, Zylis). Whether Zilles Leitgen Kremers is the same person as Leitgen(n) (q.v.) is doubtful. (Mellink, Wederdopers, 314.) vdZ.

Zillis (Zylis): see Zelis.

Zimmerauer: see Simmerauer.

Zimmermann, a Mennonite family found in West Prussia and South Germany, and also in the United States. In 1940 there were 33 Zimmermann members of the Mennonite Church in Germany, 19 in West Prussia (Danzig 10, Tiegengagen 6, Thiensdorf 3), 13 in South Germany (Ueberlingen 5, Ludwigshafen 4, Stuttgart 3, Regensburg one), and Crefeld one. Much information about the West Prussian Zimmermanns is contained in Kurt Kauenhoven, editor, Mitteilungen des Sippenverbandes der Danziger Mennoniten-Familien Epp-Kauenhoven-Zimmermann (Göttingen, 1934-43). It is most probable that the West Prussian Zimmermann family was originally called Timmerman (Dutch for "carpenter") and that Timmermann (q.v.) was the form used until the 18th century in the Danzig area. Carl Heinrich Zimmermann (d. 1897) was on the Danzig city council. Louis Edward Zimmermann kept a diary (17 volumes) before the migration to Nebraska and during the pioneer years (BeCL).

There was also a Swiss Mennonite Zimmerman family. Henry Zimmerman came from Wädenswil, Switzerland, to Germantown, Pa., in 1698, but returned to Switzerland. By 1706 he was back in Germantown and by 1710 at Lampeter, Lancaster Co., Pa. His son Emanuel Carpenter, a judge, not a Mennonite, gave the Mennonites important help. The descendants of this branch of the family carried both names, Carpenter and Zimmerman. Hans Zimmerman (d. 1771) settled in the Cocalico district, Lancaster County, about 1717. Henry and Hans were the ancestors of many Lancaster County Mennonite Zimmermans. Two church cemeteries were named for the family, one at Lichty's and another at Martindale. Among the many ministers of this family name in the Mennonite (MC) and O.O.M. churches were Jacob Zimmermann (1784-1856), bishop at Weaverland 1815-56, "One-Arm John" M. Zimmerman (1829-1903), a preacher at Weaverland, Benjamin F. Zimmerman (1851-1930), bishop in Cumberland County, Pa. (Slate Hill), 1892-1930. Now serving in the Lancaster Conference are Mahlon Zimmerman, a bishop at Ephrata since 1952, and Christian and Norman Zimmerman, ministers at Slate Hill. The O.O.M. in Lancaster County have the ministers Isaac N. Zimmerman, Isaac W. Zimmerman, and Noah Zimmerman.

A Christopher Zimmerman was in Germantown in 1708, and a trustee by the same name was serving the Worcester congregation (MC) in the Franconia Conference in 1739. A Zimmerman family was among the pioneers in the Black Creek Mennonite settlement in Welland County, Ont., near Buffalo at the beginning of the 19th century. John Henry Zimmerman came from Prussia to Beatrice, Neb. Joseph E. Zimmerman (1880-1949) was the bishop of the Milford Amish Mennonite (Neb.) congregation 1916-49. H.S.B., I.D.L.

Zimmermann, Andreas, of St. Georges, Tirol, an Anabaptist martyr, was executed at Michelsburg (q.v.) sometime between Sept. 13, 1533, the date of his trial at Michelsburg, and Oct. 15, 1533, when his son Christoph reported his father's death at a court examination. The content of Andreas' testimony is given in Hartmann Ammann, "Die Wiedertäufer in Michelsburg," XLVI. Programm des K. K. Gymnasiums zu Brixen (Brixen, 1896) 25 f. (ML IV.)

Zimmerman Mennonite Church (MC), now extinct, was a congregation of the Lancaster Conference in Carroll County, Md. The meetinghouse built by John Zimmerman in 1858 is located 2 miles south of the Mason and Dixon Line, and 3½ miles southeast of Linesboro. There had previously been a log meetinghouse across the lane. John K. Zimmerman deeded the tract in 1866 to Abraham Hostetter and Samuel T. Bechtel, trustees of the Hanover congregation. The cemetery near by is mentioned in the farm deed. The congregation was never large, and since the land was not too fertile, the members moved away; by 1921 services were discontinued. It was a part of the York-Adams County Bishop District (q.v.).

Zimmerman was the name of two cemeteries in Lancaster County, one of them associated with the Lichty meetinghouse, although a half mile away, and the other with the Martindale (q.v.) meetinghouse near by. The former is used rarely today, but the O.O.M. use the latter. Both are well kept.

I.D.L.

Zinspenning, Judith: see Sewel, William.

Zinzendorf, Count Nicholas Ludwig von (1700-60), a Silesian Pietist nobleman, renewer of the Moravian brotherhood, b. May 26, 1700, in Dresden, Germany. Although by profession he was a legal adviser at the court of the King of Saxony in Dresden until 1727, his primary interest was the kingdom of God and the saving of men. He was ordained a Lutheran minister at Tübingen in 1734. Banned from Saxony in 1736 because of his "separatistic" activities, he established his headquarters first in western Germany in the Wetterau, then 1751-55 in London, and at last on his own estate in the village of Herrnhut.

The chief interest of Zinzendorf's life, however, was the Moravian Brotherhood (Unitas Fratrum). In 1722 he gave the pitiful remnants of the Bohemian Brethren, fleeing from their homeland, asylum on his family estate of Berthelsdorf. The village which was built for them was named Herrnhut (i.e., The Lord's Protection). In 1727 the Brethren, some 300 in number, were reorganized, with Zinzendorf as their leader, becoming a new church within the general framework of Lutheranism, but with an intense sense of mission to revive the general church and to evangelize the heathen. Zinzendorf was ordained bishop of the Renewed Brotherhood in 1737 and served until 1741, when he resigned. His intense passion for the unity of all true believers, which was a dominant motive throughout his life, made him one of the first "ecumenical" leaders, although in practice no visible results in this direction were attained and he remained throughout his life basically the great leader of a great evangelistic and missionary group, called in America the Moravian Brethren Church.

Zinzendorf spent much of his life from 1737 on in traveling on two continents in the promotion of his missionary and ecumenical vision. His first major trip was to the West Indies in 1739, followed by two (1741-43) years in America (chiefly Pennsylvania). Switzerland, Holland, England, and Livonia were also included. He was directly connected with the establishment of the Moravian settlements in Pennsylvania in 1741, himself giving the name Bethlehem to the new town. Zinzendorf died at Herrnhut, May 6, 1760.

Zinzendorf's direct connection with the Mennonites is limited to two areas, Holland and Pennsylvania. In Holland it was with the Amsterdam Mennonite minister Joannes Deknatel (q.v.; 1695-1759), whom he met during his visit to Amsterdam in February and March 1736. A warm friendship developed between them, and Deknatel, while remaining a Mennonite, actually joined the Moravian Brethren congregation in Amsterdam, organized Nov. 25, 1738. Zinzendorf celebrated communion in Deknatel's home in 1737. The influence of Zinzendorf and the Moravians upon Deknatel, the Dutch Mennonite Pietist, was profound. Later the relationship cooled off, influenced among other things by Zinzendorf's inability to repay a loan from Deknatel.

The second contact with the Mennonites was in Pennsylvania. Zinzendorf attempted to establish a united fellowship of all German-speaking Christians in the colony in 1742, an attempt which failed dismally. For this purpose he called a series of seven synods, to which representatives of all groups were invited, in the hope of forming "The Pennsylvania Congregation of God in the Spirit." These were held as follows: Jan. 1, 1742, at Germantown; Jan. 14, 1742, at the home of the Schwenckfelder George Hiebner; and Feb. 21, 1742, at the home of the Huguenot Jean DeTurck at Oley. Only the first three synods were important, for the movement was obviously a failure, and the remaining four synods accomplished little but to condemn all the sects except the Moravians and the Quakers.

According to the published proceedings Mennonites were present in at least the first three synods, although nothing is known of their identity. On Jan. 12, 1742, Zinzendorf is said to have visited "a venerable but unnamed Mennonite leader" to explain to him the purposes of the synods and the aims of the Unitas Fratrum, and to invite him to attend the Second Synod. "The Mennonite received the count graciously, listened patiently, but declared that the time was too short to send qualified delegates to his meeting" (Stoudt). Apparently the Mennonites in attendance at the synods were not official delegates. One of the last four synods is said to have met in a Mennonite home in the Oley region. No trace of these meetings has been found in any Mennonite records, and there was no observable influence of Zinzendorf's work upon the Mennonites of Pennsylvania.

Augustus Spangenberg, next to Zinzendorf the outstanding leader of the Moravian Brethren, who had come to Pennsylvania as an evangelist and missionary, gave added impetus to a unique interdenominational fellowship established in 1736, called the Associated Brethren of Skippack, of which Henry Antes was the real leader, and which lasted about three years, and may have had some bearing on the Mennonites in this area. Meetings were held monthly at the home of Christoph Wiegner, a Schwenckfelder, on a farm at Skippack. "Some twenty to thirty men from communities as widely separated as Skippack, Fredericktown, Oley, and Germantown comprised the core of the union," whose meetings were for the purpose of "edification and mapping of strategy for evangelizing the Germans." "The Wiegner farm was Spangenberg's home during his first stay of three years in Pennsylvania and his evangelistic labors were greatly facilitated by the co-operation which the group meeting there gave him" (Weinlick). The Associated Brethren was the forerunner of Zinzendorf's ecumenical attempt, and according to Stoudt its membership formed the nucleus of Zinzendorf's synods. It would be surprising if none of the Skipack Mennonites were ever in contact with or attended the meetings of either the Associated Brethren or the synods. (See Moravian Church, Moravians in the Netherlands, and Pietism.) H.S.B.

John R. Weinlick, Count Zinzendorf (New York, 1956); John J. Stoudt, "Count Zinzendorf and the Pennsylvania Congregation of God in the Spirit, the First American Ecumenical Movement," Church History IX (1940) 366-80; DB 1885, 71 ff.

Zion Arapahoe (Indian) Mennonite Mission Church (GCM) is located 2 miles south of Canton in Blaine County, Okla. Missionary work among the Arapahoe (q.v.) Indians in this district was begun by S. S. Haury at Cantonment 1883-87. Other workers were J. J. Kliever 1887-89, D. B. Hirschler 1889-90, Paul Mouttet 1890-92, A. S. Voth 1892-93, N. L. Weis 1893-95, and J. A. Funk 1897-1907. In 1907 the church was moved from Cantonment to its present location and continued by J. A. Funk 1907-20, Albert Claassen 1920, G. A. Linscheid 1920-21, H. T. Neufeld 1921-27, H. J. Kliever 1927-36, G. A. Linscheid 1936-38, Benno Toews 1938-40, Arthur Friesen 1940-47, and Alfred Wiebe 1947-. The total number of Arapahoe baptized has been 236. The present (1952) living members total 111. A.Wi.

Zion Church of God in Christ Mennonite Church, located near Inman, McPherson Co., Kan., was established when Gerhard Ens, a minister of a local Mennonite group, and six members withdrew and were baptized on the basis of repentance and the new birth. Worship services were conducted in homes and schools until the meetinghouse was built in 1922. Abraham G. Ens and Peter A. Friesen, the first resident ministers, were ordained during its history, Ens serving as pastor until his death in 1936. John A. Ens and Abe R. Toews were also ordained and are now in charge. The membership in 1954 was 159. H.A.E.

Zion Hill Mennonite Church (MC), in the Middle District of the Virginia Conference, is located in the foothills of the North Mountain, 3 miles west of Singers Glen, Va., and 2 miles northeast of Sparkling Springs. In 1925 the first services in this area were held in the home of Charlie Lamb or in the woods near by. The Zion Hill meetinghouse was built in 1927, when L. H. Jones and A. W. Hersberger were serving as ministers. In 1958 Hiram Weaver and Paul S. Good were serving as pastors, with a membership of 49. H.A.B.

Zion Krimmer Mennonite Brethren Church, located near Dinuba, Tulare Co., Cal., was organized in March 1911 when the meetinghouse was erected, under the leadership of J. Z. Kleinsasser, who served as the first pastor. The principal occupation of its members is grape farming, with cotton and dairy farming next. The following ministers have served: J. Z. Kleinsasser, J. A. Wiens, A. J. Bearg, J. P. Glanzer, J. J. Kleinsasser, D. V. Wiebe, C. F. Plett, and Clarence E. Hofer, who was pastor in 1957. In 1957 the membership was 238. C.E.H.

Zion Mennonite Church (MC), Sankra, India: see Sankra.

Zion Mennonite Church (GCM), located near Goodland, Jasper Co., Ind., a member of the Central District Conference, organized in 1895 by D. D. Augspurger, the first Central District church in Indiana. In 1898 the present church building was erected. From this congregation came two foreign missionaries, who served under the Congo Inland Mission, two home mission workers, and one minister. The membership in 1957 was 48, with Dale Schertz as minister. D.S.

Zion Mennonite Church (GCM) of Donnellson, Lee Co., Iowa, a member of the Middle District Conference, was organized in the autumn of 1851, and constructed a combined school and church building in 1855, two miles north and one mile west of Donnellson. This building was replaced in 1880 by separate buildings. The present edifice in Donnellson was built in 1909 and the old site is used as a cemetery. The parochial school, begun in 1853, which gradually evolved into a summer German school, was discontinued in 1917.

In 1859 the Zion and West Point congregations invited all Mennonites of North America to a general conference, resulting in the formation in 1860 of the present General Conference Mennonite Church. The Zion congregation co-operated in organizing the Central District Conference (then Western) in 1868. The Iowa churches helped in founding the Wadsworth School (q.v.), Ohio, 1868; Christian Schowalter, Zion pastor and teacher, served as its first principal. The membership in 1957 was 208; the pastor was Harold Thiessen. V.H.N.

Zion Mennonite Church (GCM), located at Kingman, Kan., was formed when a division occurred in the Bethany Mennonite Church (q.v.). In October 1932 the new congregation was accepted into the Western District Conference. Its first leader was Joseph J. Kaufman. The first minister was J. R. Duerksen, followed by J. R. Barkman, Jacob Unruh, J. H. Epp, William Unrau, Ramon H. Jantz. The membership of the group remained near 60 for 25 years; in 1957 it was 56, with B. E. Bonebrake as pastor. J.F.S.

Zion Mennonite Church (GCM), located in Elbing, Butler Co., Kan., a member of the Western District Conference, was organized on June 10, 1883, with 14 charter members, who were a part of the immigrant group which came to Kansas in 1876 from Heubuden and Ladekopp, West Prussia. Originally worshipping with the Emmaus Mennonite Church near Whitewater, they soon found the distance to that church too great and built their own church one-half mile east and one mile north of Elbing. When this first building became too small, a new church was built in Elbing, and dedicated on Oct. 19, 1924, which building is still in use.

The church has shown an active concern for home and foreign missions. It assisted in the founding of Berean Academy (q.v.) in Elbing in 1946. Missionaries and ministers coming from the church have been the following: Marie Dyck, later Mrs. Ernst Kuhlman, to China in 1906; Abraham H. Regier, ordained in 1905; Henry J. Dyck, ordained in 1905; Walter H. Dyck, ordained in 1936; Paul Kuhlman, ordained as missionary to China in 1936; Arnold J. Regier, ordained to the ministry in 1940.

Pastors who served the church since its founding have been the following: Peter Dyck (q.v.) 1883-85, Cornelius H. Regier 1885-1921, Jacob W. Regier 1892-1919, John P. Andres 1907-32, Henry J. Dyck 1921-51, Cornelius J. Dyck 1951-54, and Waldo W. Kaufman 1954-. The membership in 1957 was 152.
C.J.D.

Zion Mennonite Church (MC), Vestaburg, Mich., is located several miles south of the town. Under the Indiana-Michigan Conference, the congregation was organized in 1914. Erie E. Bontrager was pastor of its 25 members in 1959.
M.G.

Zion Mennonite Church (GCM); correct name "Mennonite Zion Church"), located 3½ miles south of Arena, Burleigh Co., N.D., a member of the Northern District Conference, was organized in 1908. The services were held in schoolhouses until 1925 when a school building was bought, removed to the present site and remodeled into a church. In 1956 it was enlarged to seat 80. The first pastor was Sam Preheim in 1910. In 1957 the membership was 38, with Peter B. Loewen as pastor.
H.S.B.

Zion Mennonite Church (MC), Archbold, Ohio, is located in the southwest part of the city. Organized in 1955, its meetinghouse was dedicated in 1956. Most of its approximately 250 members formerly were members of the Central Mennonite Church (q.v.). In 1959 Philemon L. Frey was its pastor.
M.G.

Zion Mennonite Church (MC), now extinct, formerly called Riley Creek, was founded in 1848 about 5 miles west of Bluffton, Allen Co. (q.v.), Ohio, by John Thut and a number of his Swiss Mennonite friends. In 1843 Thut had been ordained minister at the Longenecker Mennonite Church (q.v.). He and his family were making the wagon-trail journey to Elkhart County (q.v.), Ind., when Swiss friends near Bluffton persuaded him to settle in Allen County. But when, at the first communion service, the Swiss did not observe footwashing, Thut's group withdrew and in 1862 erected the Riley Creek church about five miles west of Bluffton. Isaac Steiner, Thut's first helper in the ministry, withdrew when he was criticized for attending his wife's church (the Winebrennerians, q.v.). Christian Bare, ordained in 1856, left in 1857 to accept the offer of a farm to preach for the Yellow Creek (q.v.) congregation in Elkhart County, Ind. David Geiger, ordained c1858, united with the Herrites (Reformed Mennonites, q.v.). In 1867 John Thut was ordained bishop, but the same year after a tour of some of the Ohio churches he became ill with typhoid fever and died. Abraham Steiner and Christian P. Steiner, ordained in 1869, the former very conservative and the other progressive, could not agree and were both silenced. Abraham Steiner left to found an Egli (Defenseless) Mennonite Church (now Evangelical Mennonite Church, q.v.), taking with him the deacon. C. P. Steiner was reinstated and worked patiently to rebuild the congregation. Finally with the help of John S. Coffman and Ohio evangelists he built one of the strongest MC congregations in the state. Most of the members were descendants of John Thut or related to the family by marriage. M. S. Steiner (q.v.) was a prominent minister. In 1892 the congregation erected a new church building which they named Zion.

During the second decade of the present century the leadership of the Zion congregation passed into the hands of instructors of Bluffton College who had resigned their positions at Goshen College. In the late 1920's, after some difficulties with the Ohio and Eastern A.M. Conference (q.v.), the congregation voted to disband and razed the building. The majority of the congregation united with the Bluffton First Mennonite Church (GCM). A small cemetery marks the location of the former Riley Creek meetinghouse.
J.S.U.

John S. Umble, "Zion (Bluffton) Congregation" in "Early Mennonite Sunday Schools of Northwestern Ohio," MQR V (1931) 179-97.

Zion Mennonite Church (MC), located about 7½ miles northeast of the town of Pryor, Mayes Co., Okla., was organized in May 1911 under the leadership of B. F. Hartzler (minister), who with several other families moved to the community from Cass County, Mo., as a member of the Conservative Amish Conference. In 1912-15 several families from the disintegrating congregation at Stuttgart, Ark., moved in and joined this congregation, comprising about half the membership. In August 1938 the congregation became a member of the South Central Conference.

The first services were held alternately in the Ogretta schoolhouse and a machine shed. English was always used at the schoolhouse, while the other service was partly German. A church was built sometime later. In 1921 the vacated building at Stuttgart was moved to the present church site and in 1947 a basement was placed under this building. For three periods of one year each the congregation was without a minister, during which the deacon served. The membership in 1957 was 108, with Richard Birky as bishop and John Troyer as pastor to begin official service in May 1959. The membership in 1958 was 104.
N.H.

Zion Mennonite Church (MC) is situated on a hill about 4 miles east of Hubbard, Clackamas Co., Ore. Zion formerly belonged to the Western Amish Mennonite Conference, but since the merging of conferences in 1920 it belongs to the Pacific Coast Conference. It had its beginning as a Sunday school in a dwelling house southeast of Hubbard. On June 19, 1893, the congregation was organized in the Rockhill Methodist Church. In 1894 the present site was chosen and the church building built, which was enlarged in 1910. In 1957 the membership was 295; Edward Z. Yoder was the minister, and C. I. Kropf the bishop. In 1958 John Lederach became the pastor. A branch Sunday school conducted by the Zion congregation near Mulino, Ore., became an independent congregation in 1958.
E.G.KEN.

Zion Mennonite Church (GCM), located 4 miles from Dallas, Polk Co., Ore., a member of the Pacific District Conference, was organized in 1897 and was discontinued in 1931, when the building was moved to Dallas and the congregation reorganized and re-named the Grace Mennonite Church (q.v.). J.M.F.

Zion Mennonite Church (MC), Birdsboro, Pa., is located half way between Reading and Morgantown and a half mile off Route 122. Organized in 1949 as an outpost of the Conestoga (q.v.) congregation, it had 98 members in 1958, with Jesse Yoder and Noah K. Mack serving as ministers. It is a member of the Ohio and Eastern Conference. M.G.

Zion Mennonite Church (GCM), now extinct, located in Mann's Choice, Bedford Co., Pa., was begun in 1915 in an abandoned church by Herman Snyder, who served this group together with Napier, 4 miles away, until his death in 1917. The highest membership was 49 in 1926. In 1935 the Eastern District Mission Committee, which had supported the work, closed the church. H.S.B.

Zion Mennonite Church (GCM), located at 203 E. Broad St., Souderton, Montgomery Co., Pa., had its origin in 1887 as a small mission of Mennonite and unaffiliated families led by N. B. Grubb, pastor of the First Mennonite Church of Philadelphia. In 1892, with financial aid from the Eastern District Conference, a church was built 36 x 46 ft. In 1893 the congregation was organized with 19 charter members. The life and growth of the congregation is evident in the record of building renovations and expansion—1908, 1915, 1925, and 1940. In 1954 a 15-acre tract was purchased as a future expansion site, the purpose being to have an integrated church program ministering to the total needs of man—physical, mental, and spiritual. In 1958 the membership, mostly urban, was 655. The following have served as pastors: Allen M. Fretz 1893-1910, J. W. Schantz 1910-16, Reed F. Landis 1916-23, Grover T. Soldner 1923-31, Ernest J. Bohn 1931-44, Ellis Graber 1944-59. E.Gr.

Zion Mennonite Church (MC), York, Pa., located at Canford and East streets, was founded in 1954 under the Ohio and Eastern Conference by a group who withdrew from the Lancaster Conference. In 1957 it had 47 members, with J. Eby Lehman and H. Frank Leaman as ministers. M.G.

Zion Mennonite Church (GCM), Bridgewater, S.D., is a member of the Northern District Conference, but not of the General Conference. With its background in the Hutterian immigration of the 1870's, it was organized in 1940. It is located in Bridgewater. In 1958 Paul Dahlenburg was pastor of its 45 members. P.Da.

Zion Mennonite Church (MC), 3 miles south of Broadway, Rockingham Co., Va., is a member of the Virginia Conference in the Northern District. About 1890 a Sunday school was organized for the summer months, using for its literature the Question Book authorized by the Lancaster Conference and the New Testament. The first meetinghouse, built in 1885, was replaced in 1941 by a new brick building, with a basement and facilities for Sunday school and an audience room for the literary society of the young people. The church yard, which contains five acres of land, has a home for the janitor and a beautiful cemetery adjoining the church. The membership in 1957 was 138; the bishop in charge was J. Ward Shank; the minister was J. Otis Yoder. T.S.

Zion's Call. The first official organ of the Defenseless Mennonite Conference (now Evangelical Mennonite) was a German paper (Heilsbote) (q.v.) begun in 1898. In the same year an English monthly was begun, edited and printed by D. N. Claudon, and called Zion's Call, for many years published in the interests of the Salem Orphanage. In 1913 it was adopted as the official organ. At first it was a 4-page monthly, and for several years, up to about 1918, in pamphlet form of 32 pages. In 1920 authorization was granted to publish Zion's Call with Good Tidings under the name of Zion's Tidings. Good Tidings had been a publication of the Mennonite Brethren in Christ Church. In 1953 Zion's Tidings and Gospel Tidings (a publication of the Evangelical Mennonite Brethren) were merged under the name The Evangelical Mennonite, the present name. Others who have served as editor were Ben Rupp, Aaron Sauder, and E. E. Rupp, until 1920. Then Amos Oyer was editor for a few years with G. P. Schultz as assistant, and E. E. Zimmerman as managing editor. About 1924 G. P. Schultz assumed the entire responsibility for printing. Following his resignation H. E. Bertsche assumed the duties. From c1942 E. G. Steiner assumed the work as editor. While Bertsche was editor the paper was changed from an 8-page monthly to a 12-page and later to a 16-page. Since the merger in 1953 E. G. Steiner has been editor, C. A. Classen (from the EMB Conference) associate editor, and E. E. Zimmerman executive or general manager (since 1933). At present there are 24 pages. E.E.Z.

Zion's Tidings: see Zion's Call.

Zionsbote, German organ of the Conference of the Mennonite Brethren Church of North America, was first published in the autumn of 1884, as a four-page quarterly at a subscription price of 25¢ per year. It soon (1886) became a semimonthly (enlarged to 8 pages in 1889) in 1904 a weekly of 16 pages, and in 1958 biweekly. It was printed the first two years by the Mennonite Publishing Company at Elkhart, Ind., and thereafter successively at McPherson, Kan.; Hillsboro, Kan.; Medford, Okla.; McPherson again; and since 1913 at Hillsboro.

The purpose of the publication of the Zionsbote was to acquaint the churches with the work in the field of evangelism and church polity in order to stimulate the church life. Later it published reports from mission fields, both foreign and home, and also reports from the individual churches. From its beginning subscribers have not been confined to members of the M.B. Church. Until 1914 the Zionsbote was widely read in the churches of Russia; nearly 1,000 copies were sent there weekly. The M.B. Publishing House is the publisher. J. F. Harms served as editor 1884-1906 and as assistant editor 1922-34. Other editors have been A. L. Schellenberg, J. D. Fast, and P. H. Berg. The present editor is Orlando Harms, and the subscription stands at 1600-1800. P.H.B.

Zionspilger, Der (The Pilgrim to Zion), a Swiss Mennonite periodical published by the Emmenthal Mennonite congregation (q.v.) at Langnau, canton of Bern, Switzerland, since January 1882, as a 4-page 10 x 14 inch monthly to June 1884, bimonthly July 1884-97, weekly since 1897.

The editor has customarily been the leading elder or pastor of the Emmenthal congregation: Samuel Bähler 1882-d.90, Johann Kipfer 1890-97, 1901-43, Mathias Pohl 1898-1900, Johannes Rüfenacht 1943-. In 1918-40 the journal had a second editor besides Kipfer to represent the Freie Gemeinde, and in 1918-21 the name was changed to Freie Zeuge (q.v.) vormals Zionspilger. The Zionspilger has been a devotional-type journal with news of the Swiss congregations and in recent years brief items of Swiss and world news. Earlier some correspondence from Germany and America was printed, and in the time of Bähler and Pohl some Anabaptist and Mennonite historical material. A considerable portion of the readership has been non-Mennonite. H.S.B.

Zirkendorffer, Bernhard, a victim of the Anabaptist persecutions of the Swabian League (q.v.), was captured on April 24, 1528, with Eitelhans Langemantel (q.v.) at Leitheim, Bavaria, and although he recanted Anabaptist teachings in the hope of saving his life for the sake of his family, he was executed at Weissenhorn on May 11, 1528. He was baptized by Burkhard von Ofen at Göppingen, his native town, in the home of the miller in the presence of Conrad Huber and Peter Schleppach of Augsburg and the wife of Peck of Bergen. Of interest is the description of the instruction preceding the baptism. He was active in the care of the poor under the leadership of Nespitzer (q.v.). The record of his trial is found in Roth, pp. 12-14 and 24-27. HEGE.

Friedrich Roth, "Zur Geschichte der Wiedertäufer in Oberschwaben; II, Zur Lebensgeschichte Eitelhans Langemantels von Augsburg," Ztscht des hist. Vereins für Schwaben und Neuburg XXVII (1900) 1-132; ML IV.

Znaim (Znajmo), Moravia, a city (pop. 19,565) in Czechoslovakia, where Anabaptism found early entry and met with violent persecution in 1528. The Hutterite Chronicle lists seven martyrs at Znaim. That Anabaptism was not wiped out by this persecution is seen from the records of the trials of Anabaptists from Moravia imprisoned in Passau (q.v.) in 1535-36 who mention numerous Brethren from Znaim and the vicinity and their leaders. Thus Matthes of Auer confessed that he had been staying for 1½ years in and around Znaim with 50 Brethren. Stoffel Aschenberger, the leader of the group seized at Steinabrunn (1539) and condemned to galley slavery, wrote a letter at Falkenstein, where they were first imprisoned, to the ministers and leaders at Znaim (1540). Although they were from time to time pushed out, they always managed to return. Thus in 1559 they had a religious disputation in Znaim with the emissaries of the Bohemian Unitas, Jan Jelecky and Wenzel Solin. Later the Anabaptists were not beheaded or burned at the stake, but expelled; on Oct. 23, 1571, Balthasar Tischler, Hans Truchel, a woman, and an old glazier met this fate. A similar fate befell the Brethren who had been called by the city council to repair the fountain at the upper square and who had done their work well and cheaply. Among the nobility of the vicinity the Anabaptists had a notable friend in Wenzel Rischau, lord of Rosenstein, who kept them in his mill at Nesslowitz, for which reason he was accused at the imperial court and was consequently compelled to expel the Anabaptists. To avoid carrying out the decree he sold his mill to Adam Kaigel, who was just as benevolent to the Anabaptists as his predecessor. They were considered quiet, industrious, and honest workers and were used by the citizens in their businesses, in spite of objection by the city council and the clergy. According to a note in the archives of the Dominican monastery at Znaim there were Anabaptists also at Zerotitz, Garwitz, Jaispitz, and Durchlass, with a leader who had his seat at the Aumühle near Durchlass, but was expelled with his people by imperial orders in 1613. (Zieglschmid, Chronik, 232; ML IV.) LOSERTH.

Zoar Academy and Bible School. At the 1914 annual conference session of the Krimmer Mennonite Brethren, it was agreed to erect a building for a Bible school. The Zoar K.M.B. Church of Inman, Kan., was delegated to take the initiative in planning and building a school at Inman. The following spring a two-story brick building was constructed, with two classrooms on the main floor and an auditorium on the second, on land contributed by Peter Vogt. On Sept. 30, 1915, the building was dedicated, and in a few days the school opened its doors to 29 students for a six months' term. Under the able administration of Frank V. Wiebe the enrollment in a few years increased to 70. After several years the term was increased to eight months and later to nine months. In keeping with the objective of this school, the subjects of the first years were Bible and related subjects. With the nine months' term secular subjects were offered along with the Bible subjects, which remained compulsory. The purpose of this school as stated in its catalog was "To give the student a thorough Bible knowledge, to build and cultivate a strong Christian character, to train for leadership and Christian service."

This school operated for 30 years under the direction and support of the Zoar church and community. It gradually became obvious that better facilities had to be provided. In a united effort with other Mennonite churches in the Hutchinson and Buhler area, an inter-Mennonite corporation was organized, which established the Central Christian High School in Hutchinson, Kan., in 1948, in which the Zoar constituency had an active part. D.C.P.

Zoar Krimmer Mennonite Brethren Church of Inman, Kan., was organized in 1879. Mr. and Mrs. Gerhard Kornelson, who had been baptized two years earlier, were instrumental in organizing a group of 24 members. Jacob Klassen (d.1918) was their first leader, and later elder. Others who have served as elders or leaders of the church are John Esau, K. K. Willems, D. C. Pauls, and A. L. Friesen. The first meeting place was a sod schoolhouse. In 1883 a church was built 5 miles southwest of Inman. The present building was built in 1901. In 1957 the church had 209 members, with Arnold Enszt as pastor.

D.C.P.

Zoar Mennonite Church (GCM), located in Waldheim, Sask., was organized about 1910. A meetinghouse was built in 1912. In 1922 the congregation joined the Canadian and General conferences. Its membership in 1959 was 208, with John A. Block as pastor.
J.A.Bl.

Zoar Mennonite Church (GCM), near Goltry, Okla., a member of the Western District Conference, was organized in 1909 by settlers coming largely from McPherson County, Kan. The first meetinghouse was built in 1909-10, enlarged in 1939 to a seating capacity of 350. The membership in 1957 was 138, with Victor Graber as pastor.
J.Bu.

Zoar Mennonite Church (GCM), located in the town of Langham, Sask., a member of the Canadian District Conference, was organized in 1910 and built its meetinghouse in 1911. The membership in 1958 was 180, with Elder Henry A. Wiens as pastor. The church has had one other minister ordained as elder, J. J. Nickel, ordained in 1941.
H.A.W.

Zobel, Georg (d.1603), a Hutterite physician in Nikolsburg (q.v.), Moravia. Apparently he was a real doctor (not only a barber-surgeon) and the most famous of the numerous Hutterite physicians (see Medicine, Hutterite). In 1581/2 he received the special honor of being called to the court of Emperor Rudolph II (q.v.) in Prague. The chronicle reports that the emperor "had many famous doctors from Italy, Spain, and other lands," but no one could really help him (he was afflicted with melancholia). As a last resort the doctor of the (generally despised) Anabaptists in Moravia, who was highly esteemed by the nobles, was called. Zobel stayed in Prague for six months, the emperor improved noticeably, and "some of the barons said that the emperor would have died if he had not received our physician." In 1597 (or 1599) Zobel was again called to Prague, this time to advise the government concerning an epidemic then rampant in Bohemia. In 1593 the Hutterites made Zobel a steward (Diener der Notdurft). The abbot of the monastery of Klosterbruck near Nikolsburg, who was a violent opponent of the Anabaptists, called Zobel "my dear friend," inviting him for consultation at the monastery (see Nikolsburg). When Zobel died in 1603, the chronicle devoted a whole paragraph to his praise. Of his personal life and his relationship to the brotherhood nothing is known.
R.F.

John L. Sommer, "Hutterite Medicine and Physicians," MQR (1953) 119-21; R. Friedmann, "Hutterite Physicians and Barber-Surgeons," ibid., 128 f.; Zieglschmid, Klein-Geschichtsbuch; idem, Chronik, 567, 594; ML IV.

Zobelhof, a Hutterite Bruderhof in Hungary: see Soblahof(f).

Zoet (Soet), Jan (1610-74), a Dutch (non-Mennonite) poet of Amsterdam, and in later years an innkeeper, in whose tavern "De Zoete Rust" (Sweet Rest) some Collegiant (q.v.) poets used to meet and discuss religious problems, including the Mennonites Pieter J. van Rixtel (q.v.) and Karel Verloove (q.v.). Zoet published many volumes of mediocre verse. His poem "Het Groote Vischnet" (The Big Fishnet) criticizes the churches. vdZ.

N.N.B.Wb. I, 1477 f.; G. Kalf, Geschiedenis van de Nederl. Letterkunde IV (Groningen, 1909) 460 ff., 516, 547 f.; C. B. Hylkema, Reformateurs, 2 vols. (Haarlem, 1900 and 1902) passim; K. O. Meinsma, Spinoza en zijn Kring (The Hague, 1896) 118-21.

Zoetermeer, a village in the Dutch province of South Holland, in the 17th century the seat of a Flemish Mennonite congregation, usually called Zoetermeer and Zegwaard. Concerning its history very little is known. It was always subsidized by Rotterdam and other Mennonite congregations. About 1695 Jan van Gaveren was its preacher, but its pulpit was mostly vacant. In 1710-11 this very small church contributed 26 guilders to the relief of the Swiss Brethren, but soon after, according to a letter by the church board of Rotterdam of March 13, 1713, it dissolved.
vdZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. II, 2, No. 514; Blaupot t. C., Holland II, 43, 131; DB 1918, 69.

Zofingen Disputation, an important debate between Swiss Anabaptists and ministers of the Swiss Reformed Church, held in 1532 in the town of Zofingen, almost equidistant from Zürich, Basel, and Bern, some 30 miles west of Zürich. The "Freie Aemter," today's canton of Aargau, an area situated between Zürich, Bern, and Basel, and administered by Bern under the supervision of the other cantons, were the home of an Anabaptist congregation by the fall of 1525. Because of the more complex administrative arrangements it was more difficult for Bern to take action against Anabaptism there, and the preaching of Hans Pfistermeyer (q.v.) could continue with few interruptions until he was led to recant in 1531.

In January 1532 the reformers of Bern, assisted by Wolfgang Capito (q.v.), laid the foundations of reformed polity in the Berner Synodus, which prepared them, for the first time, to act energetically in a sweeping reorganization of the churches, involving also new action against dissenters in the canton and in Bern's subject lands. The success encountered with Pfistermeyer coincided with the need to legitimize a new rigor in repression, making a disputation with the Anabaptists seem doubly desirable, "so that everyone may be satisfied and no one might claim . . . that we attack them without a hearing" (words of the Bern Council). Safe-conduct was promised to all Anabaptists, and Zofingen in the Freie Aemter was chosen as host city rather than Bern so that they might feel freer to come. No outside participants on the Reformed side were invited, in order to forestall the accusation that the preachers in Bern were dependent on Zürich and Strasbourg, but Heinrich Bullinger provided considerable advice by letter.

The proceedings began on July 1, 1532, with 23

Anabaptists present, of whom Martin Weniger (q.v.) of Schaffhausen and Hans Hotz were the main speakers. Berchtold Haller and Caspar Megander of Bern and Sebastian Hofmeister of Zofingen led the eight-man Reformed delegation, of which the apostate Pfistermeyer was also a member. Representatives of the four cities of the Aargau presided, the debating etiquette was irreproachable, and the minutes, kept by three secretaries and offered to all parties involved for verification, were printed in Zürich at once and distributed at the expense of the Bern government.

The following questions were debated in sequence: I. That love is the final arbiter of all disagreements; II. Whose "sending" is valid? III. Which is the true church? IV. The ban (and whether it may rightly be administered by the state); V. The magistracy; VI. Should the Christian pay tithes and taxes? VII. The oath; VIII. The calling of preachers by the state; IX. The support of preachers by prebends; X. Whether the Christian should charge interest; XI. Baptism. In spite of superficial agreements under points I, II, IV, and VI, no progress was made and no Anabaptists were persuaded to recant. The debate (and the safe-conduct for the Anabaptists) ended on the evening of July 9, and the irreproachable etiquette gave way again to persecution (since May 16 of that year it was legal to execute Anabaptists without process of law, to get around the complications of administering the subject territories). Both parties claimed to have carried off the victory in the debate.

Zofingen is the most significant of the Swiss Anabaptist disputations, rivaled only by Bern (1538; cf. ME I, 289), in which, however, both positions are less succinctly presented. The issue of baptism, which until 1527 had been the only one to be debated at length, is now dealt with last; it is becoming clear that the Reformed party, in declaring "love" (cf. Article I above; "love" is the concern for the unity and peace of Christian society) to be the ultimate exegetical norm, is seriously qualifying its original Biblicism in the interest of church-state harmony. Two views of the church now stand out against one another in bold relief. J.H.Y.

Handlung oder Acta gehaltner Disputation und Gespräch zu Zofingen inn Berner Biet mit den Widertüuffern (Zürich, 1532); John Yoder, Die Gespräche zwischen Täufern und Reformatoren in der Schweiz, 1523-1538 (Basel doctoral dissertation, 1957) (Karlsruhe, 1959) 127 ff.; J. H. Yoder and Heino Fast, "How to Deal with Anabaptists, An Unpublished Letter of Heinrich Bullinger," MQR XXXIII (1959) 83-95; ML IV.

Zollikon, a village at the southern edge of Zürich, Switzerland, the seat of the first Anabaptist congregation, which was in existence eight months, from the end of January to August 1525. It was the only Anabaptist congregation ever established in or in the immediate vicinity of the city of Zürich (q.v.). The village inhabitants included at this time, as Bruppacher has shown, about 50 large farm owners and 40 small farm owners. Most of the Anabaptists belonged to the latter class, and some 30 of the 40 joined the movement. According to Blanke, from Jan. 22-29, beginning the day after the founding of the Anabaptist brotherhood in the evening meeting in the home of Felix Manz (q.v.) in Zürich on Jan.

21, the day on which the Zürich council proscribed Anabaptism, a total of 35 persons are known to have been baptized, 34 men and one woman, 30 of them independent peasants, and four hired hands. They belonged to such old Zollikon families as Breittiner, Bleuler, Hottinger, Kienast, Murer, Rutschmann, and Thomann. The Hottingers were the most numerous in the group. Chief among them, apparently the leader, was Jakob Hottinger (q.v.), the only one who persisted in his Anabaptism beyond 1527, and who was put in prison as late as April 1528 because he did not attend the regular church services but arranged special meetings. Other names among the Zollikon members were Unholz, Schuhmucher, and Schad. Three earlier influential members of the Zollikon "Brethren in Christ," as they called themselves (Heini Hottinger, Felix Kienast, and Hans Murer), were among the soldiers in the army of Zürich who died on the field of battle at Cappel in October 1531.

Fritz Blanke's brilliant account of the Zollikon Anabaptists based wholly on the sources as published in the Zürich Täuferakten edited by von Muralt and Schmid in 1952 makes it clear (1) that the Zollikon Anabaptist congregation was the result of a genuine religious revival, in which conviction of sin, repentance, and faith in Christ as Saviour were the carrying experience; (2) that the revival in Zollikon followed directly on the great night service of Jan. 21, the birthday of Anabaptism, where Grebel and Blaurock baptized 15 persons; (3) that Johannes Brötli (q.v.), a former Catholic priest, who had joined Zwingli's reformatory movement in the summer of 1523 and was living in Zollikon without a church position, was the first one to baptize a Zollikon inhabitant, and thus in a sense the establisher and first leader of the congregation there; (4) that Conrad Grebel (q.v.) led the first communion service on Sunday or Monday, Jan. 22 or 23, in Jakob Hottinger's home, but thereafter had no further connection with Zollikon but started his missionary career in another direction (Schaffhausen); (5) that Felix Manz and Georg Blaurock (q.v.) were active in Zollikon for a time in the early weeks and performed baptisms; (6) that repeated arrests and harrying of the members of the Zollikon brotherhood finally broke their will to establish an independent free church and prevented the establishment of a full Anabaptist congregation as occurred elsewhere in Switzerland and South Germany.

Johannes Brötli, the first leader, was expelled from the canton of Zürich on Jan. 29, 1525. On the next day, Manz and Blaurock were arrested with 25 local men, the former imprisoned in the Wellenberg prison tower, the latter in the former Augustinian monastery, where they were kept for eight days. Here the three city pastors, Zwingli, Jud, and Megander, after lengthy discussions, succeeded in securing a compromise whereby the Brethren would be allowed to meet in small groups for Bible reading and study, but would leave the preaching and baptism to the regular city preachers. A letter from Brötli (then at Hallau) to the Zollikon group, after he had heard of the compromise, appealing for steadfastness, has been preserved; in fact the Brethren soon regained their footing and abandoned the compromise.

When Blaurock was released from prison at the end of February 1525, he appeared in Zollikon, held several evangelistic services on Feb. 26, and baptized 10 persons, two men and eight women. On March 12 Georg Schad, a peasant, baptized 40 persons in the Zollikon village church. On March 8-15 some 80 more were baptized, 30 by Hans Bichter, seven by Jacob Hottinger, Jr., two by Hans Huiuff, and one each by Hans Oggenfus and Valentes Gredig; others not listed. Three fourths of the baptized were not residents of Zollikon, but were mostly from the neighboring villages of Küsnacht and Höngg. At the Bible meetings preaching was added, and at each service a communion was held. Meetings were held at five different places in homes, and in groups larger than the limit of four imposed by the earlier compromise. Discipline was practiced through the ban. As Blanke says, "Since they had preaching, baptism, communion, and discipline, they had the four marks necessary for a full independent Christian congregation."

The Zürich council now called to account those Zollikoners who had broken their pledge of February. All those who had presumably baptized, 19 men, practically all the leading Anabaptist personalities of Zürich and Zollikon, were imprisoned on March 16, 1525, in the Augustinian monastery for nine days, during which they were questioned and Zwingli endeavored to reconvert them one by one in separate cells. The pressure was too great; all but four of the prisoners yielded to Zwingli and promised "to desist from rebaptizing and not to speak or act against infant baptism." Blanke comments that this was in effect the breaking of the Anabaptist movement among the peasants of Zollikon. Only a few individuals remained steadfast.

An unusual incident occurred in June 1525, when a procession of men, women, and children of Zollikon marched through Zürich's streets and squares shouting that Zwingli was the dragon prophesied in Rev. 12:3, and calling upon the inhabitants of the city to repent, lest a terrible catastrophe befall them. No doubt some of the members of the former Anabaptist group were in the procession, but clearly none of the leaders took part, since no arrests were made, and when later arrests were made no charges or questions about the procession were ever raised. The forcible suppression of Anabaptism no doubt contributed to the explosion. But such action and the corresponding ideas were not at all characteristic of Zürich and Zollikon Anabaptism, Blanke points out, referring to the fact that of the two dozen extant letters from the Anabaptist circle in 1524-25 only two have any eschatological references, and these are letters of Conrad Grebel. The Anabaptist message, he says, was polarized around the themes of sin and forgiveness, not the end of the world; the documents tell of concerns for the preaching of the true Biblical message, the building of the true church, of baptism, of steadfastness under trial, of defense against false accusations.

There is evidence that the suppressed Anabaptists of Zollikon continued to hold their Bible study meetings after March 1525, although they did not baptize anyone, and they probably did not attend the state church services. In July the Zollikon group sent three Bible readers (Rudolf Rutschmann, Rutsch Hottinger, and Felix Kienast) to near-by Nänikon and Wassberg, in response to requests from these villages, to lead Bible study meetings. As a result, in August the Zürich council issued an order to Jacob Hottinger forbidding the Bible meetings which they had earlier authorized in February. Then the Anabaptist group (thirty in number) met in Heini Hottinger's home and decided "to give up baptizing, simply to live together in a Christian way, and to be obedient to the authorities." This meant, says Blanke, the final burial of the plan to establish a permanent free church in Zollikon and the agreement to give up the congregational Bible meetings and to attend the state church services, whatever the private convictions of the individuals may have been.

The last flicker of Anabaptist spirit in Zollikon manifested itself in June 1527 and proved that there still were private convictions under the surface. Five Zollikoners, Jacob, Uli, and Heini Hottinger, Jakob Unholz, and Felix Kienast, visited two Anabaptists held in prison in Grüningen (q.v.)—Jakob Falk (q.v.) and Heini Reimann, who were facing a possible death sentence. The visitors comforted the prospective martyrs and urged them to stand faithful to the truth to the end.

Jacob Hottinger's statement to his inquisitors in August 1525 is characteristic of the position of the Zollikon Anabaptists. "The state has no power over God's word; God's word is free." He appealed to the Zürich council not to compel attendance at the state church services, but to permit the practice of the Christian faith outside the state church apparatus. He demanded freedom of conscience and freedom of church building. This appeal lies at the very heart of the Anabaptist position. Zollikon was the first place in Protestant history where the establishment of a free and voluntary church was attempted. The attempt failed; it was ahead of the time.

F.B.L., H.S.B.

The above account is drawn from the unusually fine and scholarly portrayal by Fritz Blanke, Professor of Church History in the University of Zürich, in Brüder in Christo, Die Geschichte der ältesten Täufergemeinde: Zollikon 1525 (Zwingli-Verlag, Zürich, 1955). Part of the same material was given earlier in Blanke's article, "Zollikon, 1525. Die Entstehung der ältesten Täufergemeinde," Theologische Zeitschrift VIII (1952) 241-62, which was published in English as "The First Anabaptist Congregation, Zollikon, 1525," MQR XXVII (1953) 17-33; TA Zürich; A. Nüesch and H. Bruppacher, Das alte Zollikon (Zürich, 1899); Heinold Fast and John H. Yoder, "Bullinger's Letter of 1532, 'How to Debate with Anabaptists,'" MQR XXXIII (1959); ML IV.

Zomerg(h)em, a hamlet near Gent, Belgium, where the Mennonites from near and far used to meet after nearly all the Mennonite congregations in Belgium had died out because of persecution. In 1630 Elder Jacques van Maldeghem (q.v.) was still preaching in the meetinghouse (preecckhuys) at Zomergem, but in that year this last center of Flemish Mennonitism was given up. (DB 1876, 96, 101-4, 109.)
voZ.

Zon, De, a Mennonite meetinghouse at Amsterdam, Holland, in 1664-1801 the seat of the Zonist (q.v.) congregation, which, having separated from the Lamists (q.v.) on June 22, 1664, because of the Lammerenkrijgh (q.v.), held separate meetings, at first worshipping in a warehouse in de Oude Teertuinen. On Sept. 15, 1664, it bought a stately house, a former brewery on the Singel Canal, with the sign of a sun (Dutch zon) on the façade, which it adapted as a meetinghouse, and remodeled in 1683. It acquired a pipe organ in 1786 and was used until April 1801, when the Zonist congregation merged with the Lamists. The Zon meetinghouse was sold in 1802 after the organ and the pulpit had been transferred to the Toren (q.v.) meetinghouse of Amsterdam. vdZ.

Naamlijst 1802, 59-68; DB 1898, 1-54, passim; Blaupot t. C., Holland I, 389.

Zon, De kleine, the name of a meetinghouse and congregation, which in 1670 under the leadership of the preachers Pieter Eyssen (q.v.) and Isaac van Vreden (q.v.) separated from the Amsterdam Zonist (q.v.) congregation. The meetinghouse was located in the Prinsenstraat. In 1679 the congregation reunited with the Zonist church. (DB 1898, 5; Inv. Arch. Amst. II, Nos. 1393, 1404.) vdZ.

Zondagsbode, De, a Dutch Mennonite weekly, appeared from Nov. 6, 1887, until June 21, 1942, when it was suppressed by the German military forces then occupying the Netherlands. The 1887-94 issues bear the title De Zondagsbode, weekblad in Doopsgezinde en verwante Christelijke gemeenten; it was then much read by the Dutch Baptists and contained news from Baptist congregations. From Nov. 7, 1926, it was the official organ of the A.D.S. It was born from an idea launched by S. de Waard at the 1886 yearly meeting of the Zwolsche Vereeniging (q.v.). The 1887 meeting of this association appointed a committee to promote a weekly, which was published in the fall of that year with H. Koekebakker Jr, S. Cramer, and L. Hesta as editors. The next issue was edited by Koekebakker alone, who was the editor until his death in October 1890. Thereupon G. ten Cate was the editor (October 1890-October 1894), followed by P. Feenstra Jr (October 1894-April 1916), J. Wuite (May 1916-1930), and W. Koekebakker (1930-1942). Its successor was the Algemeen Doopsgezind Weekblad (q.v.), started in 1948. vdZ.

DB 1887, 133; 1888, 137; 1889, 117 f.; 1895, 145; Stemmen uit de Doopsgez. Broederschap I (1952) No. 1, pp. 18-20.

Zondervan, Pieter Sjoerds (Parraga, Dec. 8, 1863-Deventer, Nov. 6, 1937), was trained for the ministry at the university and the Mennonite seminary of Amsterdam, serving as pastor at Ytens 1889-91, Barsinghorn 1891-92, and Leeuwarden 1892-1924, when he retired. He was a man of great modesty, yet very learned. Besides some sermons he published Radical Christusbewoening (Leeuwarden, 1916) and a paper, De Beteekenis van een Christologie op kritisch standpunt (Assen, 1925). (DJ 1939, 17-26, with portrait.) vdZ.

Zonist Conference (Zonsche Sociëteit). Soon after the founding of the Amsterdam Zonist congregation (see Zonists) Samuel Apostool and other Zonist leaders tried to win over other churches to their views: in 1665, for example, Apostool visited several congregations in the province of Zeeland. As early as Sept. 9, 1664, a meeting of conservative leaders held at Utrecht drew up the outline of the Verbondt (q.v.) van Eenigheydt, which was approved and signed by the delegates of 23 Zonist churches at a second meeting held at Leiden Oct. 1, 2, 1664. In this Verbondt they agreed upon certain principles, such as the strict maintenance of the Mennonite confessions of faith and rejection of Collegiantism (q.v.). On the basis of the Verbondt a conference was founded on July 18, 1674. In the booklet Grondt-steen (q.v.) van Vreede en Verdraegsaemheit other churches were invited to join the Zonist conference, which in 1674 embraced the 23 churches which had signed the Verbondt in 1664 and some 25 others. In 1787 the Zonist conference still comprised 39 congregations. Meetings were held annually until 1787, thereafter every two years, from 1684 to 1796 in the Amsterdam Zonist meetinghouse. The purpose of this conference, which was promoted chiefly by the Amsterdam Zonist church, was to maintain the old Mennonite doctrines as formulated in the confessions of faith. Attempts made in 1684 and 1688 to reunite with the Lamists (q.v.) failed; likewise a conference between the Zonists and Groningen Old Flemish in 1766 failed to bring about a desired merger. In 1766 the annual Zonist conference approved the project of having a new confession of faith drawn up by Cornelis Ris (q.v.); it was introduced by the Hoorn congregation, but was not officially accepted by the conference until 1776, and even then it was used in only a few Zonist churches.

In 1796 the Zonist congregation of Amsterdam withdrew because it no longer wished to stand for the principles of the conference, and because it was preparing a merger with the Amsterdam Lamist congregation. This actually meant the end of the Zonist conference, which did not hold any meetings after May 25, 1796. vdZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 885-944; Blaupot t. C., Holland I, 344; II, 81-90; DJ 1940, 58 f.

Zonists (Dutch, Zonisten, Zonnisten, Sonnisten). About 1660 in the Amsterdam Flemish, Frisian, and High German Mennonite congregation, usually called the church "bij't Lam" or Lamist church, a dissension had arisen between a more conservative part, called the Ouderen or Apostoolsen, and a more progressive part, called the Galenisten (see Lammerenkrijgh). These quarrels ended in a schism, Samuel Apostool (q.v.) with some other preachers and deacons and about 500 of the 2,000 members separating from the main body on June 22, 1664. The Apostoolsen soon met in the Zon (q.v.) meetinghouse; hence they were called Zonists. The schism was caused by differences concerning the valuation of the confessions of faith, the Apostoolsen holding that the Mennonite church was the only true Christian church which was denied by the progressives, and the fact that the Galenists (progressive followers of Galenus Abrahamsz) favored Collegiantism, which the conservatives considered a danger to the church. Among the leaders in the Amsterdam Zonist church were, besides Apostool, men like Michiel Fortgens (q.v.), Herman Schijn (q.v.), and the austere deacon Lambert Bidloo (q.v.). Soon after the schism negotiations were held to heal the rupture, but several discussions (1668, 1672, 1684, 1685, 1688, 1722) failed and it was not until 1801 that a merger came about.

The membership of the Amsterdam Zonist church was c500 in 1664, c550 in 1743, and c300 in 1801. Like its Lamist sister church the Amsterdam Zonists started a seminary for the training of ministers; it was led by the pastor Petrus Smidt (q.v.) from 1753 until 1781; the number of students was, however, very small, only 18 in all. The Zonist church of Amsterdam also had an orphanage and an old people's home in the Tuinstraat. In the early 18th century Amsterdam Zonist leaders like Herman Schijn corresponded with the Mennonites in Prussia and were very active in their behalf. Soon after the founding of the Zon, a small group, called De Kleine Zon (q.v.), separated from the Amsterdam Zonist congregation but joined the mother church again by 1679. In 1752 the Old Frisian congregation at Amsterdam merged with the Zonists, and in 1788 the Old Flemish congregation did so.

Ministers of the Amsterdam Zonist church were Samuel Apostool, serving 1664-99, T. T. van Sittert 1664-d.64, Tobias Govertsz van den Wijngaard 1664-69, Isaac van Vreden 1664-70, Gijsbert ter Singel 1664-67, Jan van Dijk 1664-d.78, Pieter Eysen 1664-70, Samuel van Deyl 1670-87, Pieter Apostool 1672-80, J. Bording 1675-d.82, N. Veen 1675-d.78, P. J. Beets 1682-d.1710, Michiel Fortgens 1682-d.95, Herman Schijn 1690-d.1727, H. Reynskes van Overwijk 1696-1716 and 1717-25, J. Brand 1701-25, D. van Heyst 1701-16, H. Bakker 1723-d.56, G. Maatschoen 1726-50, Petrus Smidt 1728-d.81, A. Westerhuys 1729-d.36, Joh. Couwenhoven 1754-1801, Corn. van Kampen 1755-81, A. H. van Gelder 1780-1801, M. de Bleyker 1781-d.88, J. Chr. Sepp 1788-1801, and Abr. Tieleman 1788-1801. At the merger Couwenhoven, Sepp, and Tieleman retired, whereas van Gelder remained a minister of the united congregation.

The Amsterdam Zonists, at first very strict and conservative, grew rather liberal at the end of the 18th century, even more liberal than the Lamists. A hymnal, the Groote Bundel (q.v.), introduced in the Amsterdam Zonist congregation in 1796, breathes a very rationalistic spirit, and the confessions of faith then were no longer appreciated.

Not only at Amsterdam, but also in other congregations, dissensions arose in 1660 and shortly after between the conservative members and the progressives, and in a few churches this led to a schism; for example, in the Haarlem "den Blok" (q.v.) congregation in 1671. In other places the congregations began to call themselves Zonist or Lamist. Thereupon the familiar old party names like Flemish, High German, etc., were gradually dropped. Among the congregations sympathizing with the Zonists and soon joining the Zonist (q.v.) conference, were a number of Waterlander churches in the province of North Holland, and some Waterlander leaders, like E. A. van Dooregeest (q.v.) and P. J. Stapper (q.v.), became strong Zonist leaders. In Friesland there was little sympathy with the Zonists, nearly all the churches siding with the Lamists. vDZ.

H. W. Meihuizen, Galenus Abrahamsz (Haarlem, 1954) 97 f., 101 f., 114 f., and passim; J. Wuite, "De Scheuring tusschen het Lam en de Zon," DB 1900, 1-37; Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 875, 907, 912-26, 944; II, Nos. 5a, 49, 253-55, 308 f., 317, 362-78, 593-608, 746-52, 875, 929-31, 1070-77, 1108 f., 1147, 1243-72, 1281-1343, 1406-38; Blaupot t. C., Holland I, 341-45; II, 45, 187.

Zonshofje, a Mennonite home for aged women at Amsterdam, Holland, built in 1765 on the site of the former "Arke Noach" Mennonite meetinghouse (1670-79 of the "Kleine Zon," q.v., and 1720-52 of the Frisian congregation). The home was founded by the Amsterdam Zonist (q.v.) church for its members. It was enlarged at the end of the 19th century and now has room for 32 unattached women. vDZ.

Zook (Zaug, Zaugg, Zuck, Zug, Zowg), a Mennonite and Amish family from Signau in the Swiss canton of Bern. Caspar Zougck, of Schuselbühl near Sumiswald, was one of the Anabaptist speakers at the Bern (q.v.) disputation in 1538. Uli Zaugg, a preacher in the canton of Bern, was imprisoned in 1644. Those in America are the descendants of the brothers Christian, Moritz, and Johannes Zug, who were grandsons of Hans Zoug, a Mennonite preacher of Signau, Bern, who with others was imprisoned in Switzerland for his faith 1660-71. The three brothers arrived in Philadelphia in 1742 and settled in Chester County, Pa. The colonial archives of Pennsylvania list seven other Zugs who arrived in Philadelphia 1727-96, but their descendants do not appear in American Amish or Mennonite history. C. Z. Mast in 1942 estimated the total number of living descendants of the three immigrant brothers at 25,000, the largest concentration being in Chester County, Pa. Many are members of the Mennonite, Amish, Brethren, or Quaker churches. Christian Zug's youngest son became an Amish preacher and his congregation, near Malvern, about 1795 built the first A.M. meetinghouse in America. A considerable number of his descendants and also those of Moritz Zug are Quakers. Shem Zook (q.v.), Mennonite writer and historian, and C. Z. Yoder (q.v.), M.C. leader in Sunday-school and missionary activities at the turn of the 19th century, are descendants of Moritz. The third brother, Johannes, is the progenitor of a large number of Old Order Amish in Chester County. Many of them are members of the John and Daniel Esch families (see Esch). Ordained men bearing the name Zook are found in many states from Pennsylvania to Oregon and from Michigan to Florida, but only in those branches originally related to the Amish: Conservative Mennonite, 2 preachers; M.C., 2 bishops, 3 preachers; O.O.A. (in Pennsylvania). 2 bishops, 5 preachers, and (in Tennessee) one preacher. Ellrose D. Zook is executive editor of the Mennonite Publishing House, Scottdale, Pa. J.S.U.

C. Z. Mast and R. E. Simpson, Annals of the Conestoga Valley (Churchtown, Pa., 1942) 196-200.

Zook, Shem (1798-1880), the youngest son of John Zook (1748-1804) and Fannie Yoder, was born Sept. 26, 1798, in Mifflin County, Pa. He was an alert Amish Mennonite layman, active as a writer, historian, and publisher during the middle of the 19th century. He married Veronica Yoder (d.1874) and was the father of ten children. In 1849 he published a German edition of the Martyrs' Mirror, printed on the press of King and Baird, Philadelphia, Pa. He contributed articles to several books and periodicals, including "Omish Mennonites" in I. Daniel Rupp's History of Religious Denominations (Philadelphia, 1844) 560-61, and "Amish, Omish or Hooker Mennonites," in the Lewisburg Chronicle (Nov. 6, 1850). A letter signed by Shem and David Zook concerning the origin of the Amish sect appears in the Register of Pennsylvania VII, No. 11 (March 12, 1831) 162. Another short history of the Mennonites and Amish written by Shem Zook, entitled "Kurzgefasste Geschichte der Deutschen Täufer oder Mennoniten," appeared in Verhandlungen der Diener Versammlungen (Lancaster, 1862) 19-23. A different article "Kurzgefasste Geschichte der Menno-niten," in Ermahnungen von George Jutzi (Somerset, 1853) 329-36, was erroneously attributed to Sam. Zook. Because of his expert German penmanship Shem Zook was chosen on several occasions to serve as secretary to the Amish conferences (Diener-Versammlungen, q.v.) (1862-78). He served as secretary with his son-in-law J. K. Hartzler (1838-1906) at the Amish conferences of 1863 and 1864. In 1880 he wrote and published a 31-page pamphlet, Eine Wahre Darstellung (Mattawana), an account of early Mifflin County Amish church divisions. A letter of his is published in Hertzler Genealogy (1885), 119. At the time of his death he had in his possession many documents and records, but unfortunately these were all destroyed at his home near Mattawana in the flood of 1889. He died on Dec. 17, 1880. He is buried in the A.M. cemetery near Mattawana. J.A.H.

Zorgdrager, Kornelius Pietersz: see Sorghdrager.

Zuberhans, an Anabaptist of Heginsberg near Stuttgart, Württemberg, who confessed on March 27, 1528, that he had been baptized on the previous Christmas Day in Hainbach by Felix [Pfundler], a shoemaker of Esslingen. He related that Felix had taken water in his two hands out of a dish and poured it upon his head as he kneeled, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. He then gave Felix three kreutzers for the common treasury. (TA Württemberg, 6, 7, 914, 916.) H.S.B.

Zuckenhammer, Hans (d.1598), a Hutterite leader, born in Genkhofen, Bavaria, also called "Rotbart" because of his red hair, a smith by trade, very active as a missionary in Bavaria and Tirol. The Hutterite Chronicle records with great detail Zuckenhammer's experience during one of these missionary trips when he and his companion, Wolf Raufer, were caught near Salzburg and imprisoned in Tittmoning, Bavaria, for several weeks in 1579. The remarkable fact of this story is that the two brethren were rather decently treated in spite of their courageous stand for their faith. Finally the Bishop of Salzburg allowed them to return home. During their imprisonment they composed three hymns, now in the Lieder der Hutterischen Brüder, 741-52.

In 1585 Zuckenhammer was made a preacher (Diener des Wortes), or at least confirmed as such (elsewhere the record says that in 1597 he had been minister for 17 years). One year before his death he was "tried" on a charge of not maintaining strict discipline (the Chronicle devotes six pages to this affair). The "trial" took place at the Bruderhof of Protzka, Slovakia, and was presided over by Claus Braidl, bishop. Zuckenhammer admitted that he did not deserve to serve as preacher because of slackness and negligence, but the real accusation does not become too clear. Finally it was decided to excommunicate him. He asked to be allowed to remain with the brotherhood, accepting the penalty and offering to confess in public. Thus he was first excommunicated, and soon thereafter restored to full membership. One year later (1598) he died at Protzka.

Zuckenhammer's name was formerly attached to an important Hutterite codex, the "Codex Zuckenhammer" (so named by Beck) of 1583, which contains on 325 leaves the well-known Ein Schön lustig Büchlein, which is the great Article Book (q.v.), now at the Library of the Evangelical Church of Bratislava, Czechoslovakia (sign. 391 kt). Both Loserth (237) and Wiswedel (140) assumed erroneously that Zuckenhammer was the author simply because his name was written on the first page, but this was merely a sign of ownership. Actually this work goes back to Peter Walpot (q.v.), and the Codex Zuckenhammer is but one of many such copies, although it is indeed one of the most beautifully written. R.F.

Loserth, Communismus, 237; Wiswedel, Bilder II, 140 (Wiswedel devotes an entire chapter to Zuckenhammer); Beck, Geschichts-Bücher, Zieglschmid, Chronik.

Zuercher (Zürcher, Zercher, Zurger, Zurcher, Züricher, Zerger), a Mennonite family of Swiss origin meaning "of Zürich." The family was early found in the canton of Bern in the villages of Rüderswil, Langnau, Sumiswald, and Aarburg.

In 1649 Joseph Zürcher was brought before the Bernese authorities for being an Anabaptist. The verdict was that he must either leave or be imprisoned. Hans Zürcher, 40, of Frutigen, was deported in 1711 for not recanting. During the early part of the 18th century members of the family moved to the Jura. In 1738 André Zürcher of Sumiswald is listed as living near Moutier with his family. In 1768 Peter and Joseph Zürcher of Sumiswald were living at Tramelan in the Jura. Members of the family moved to Montbéliard during the latter part of the 18th century. The Palatinate Mennonite census list of 1738 names Johannes Zerger. In 1940, eight Zerchers and 31 Zergers were members of Mennonite churches in South Germany. It is assumed by C. Henry Smith that Michael Zurger, who arrived in Pennsylvania on the Charming Polly on Oct. 8, 1737, and Ulerich Zercher, who arrived in Philadelphia on Sept. 23, 1752, were Mennonites.

In 1821 Abraham and David Zürcher left their Jura homes and settled in the Sonnenberg community, Wayne County, Ohio. This name is still a very common one in this Swiss community and is also found in Adams County, Ind., and in the G.C.M. community near Whitewater, Kan. E. E. Zuercher, Hubbard, Ore., and Isaac Zuercher, Orrville, Ohio, were M.C. ministers in 1958, and Dwight Zuercher of Hillsdale, Okla., was a G.C.M. minister. Gerhard Zerger, Moundridge, Kan., for many years served on the Board of Bethel College. D.L.G.

Zuiderhofje, a Mennonite old people's home at Haarlem, Holland, founded in 1640 by Jaques van Damme and his wife Elisabeth van Blenckvliet. It first belonged to the Flemish Den Blok congregation. vDZ.

Zuiderklasse (South group), an association of Mennonite churches in the southwest of the Dutch province of Friesland, founded in 1709 and embracing the congregations of Hindeloopen, Koudum, Warns, Staveren, Bakhuizen, Workum, Makkum, Bolsward, Santfirderrijp, and Molkwerum. It was a kind of independent conference within the Mennonite conference of Friesland (FDS). For some time it did not participate in the activities of the FDS, holding its own Zuiderklasse meetings. In 1772 it resolved to co-operate in conference activities again, though it held exceptional rights as to subsidizing. These exceptions were abolished in 1841 and the Zuiderklasse dissolved. A special aim of the Zuiderklasse was to give mutual aid in cases of a vacant pulpit in one of its members, which soon after its dissolving was taken over by the Ring Bolsward (q.v.). vDZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. I, No. 958; Blaupot t. C., Friesland, 185, 251 f.; DB 1895, 16 f.; 1901, 114; 1902, 39; 1905, 47, 55 f.

Zuidholland, a province of the Netherlands: see South Holland.

Zuidhollands(ch)-Zeeuws(ch)e Ring, an association of Mennonite congregations, founded at Middelburg in 1862 on the initiative of the Rotterdam congregation. At first this Ring (q.v.) included the congregations of Rotterdam, Middelburg, Dordrecht, and Vlissingen, but the next year Dordrecht withdrew, and Leiden and Ouddorp joined the Ring, the newly founded congregation of The Hague joining in 1882. About 1887 this Ring, though not dissolved, ceased activities until 1917. Since then it has held yearly meetings and in case of vacancy in the pulpit in one of the churches of the Ring the other congregations take charge. At present (1959) the following eleven congregations are members of this Ring: Leiden, The Hague, Delft, Rotterdam, Dordrecht, and Ouddorp in South Holland, Goes, Middelburg, Vlissingen, and Aardenburg in Zeeland, and Breda in North Brabant. vDZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. I, No. 853a; DB 1876, 63-77; 1918, 155; De Zondagsbode XXX (1916-17) No. 36.

Zuidhollandsche Sociëteit (South Holland Conference), also called Waterlander Conference, or Lamist Conference, was to some extent a continuation of the Waterlander conferences which had been held from time to time from 1568, as for example in 1647 at Amsterdam. In 1674, when the more conservative churches in North and South Holland organized in the Zonist (q.v.) Sociëteit, the more liberal or Lamist churches made an attempt to found a Lamist conference of all the progressive congregations. This conference as such did not come into being, most North Holland congregations feeling that their Rijper (q.v.) Sociëteit was sufficient. Thereupon, on the initiative of the Rotterdam congregation, the delegates of the four leading churches in Haarlem, (then) South Holland (Amsterdam, Leiden, and Rotterdam) held a meeting at Haarlem on Nov. 24, 1675. This can be considered as the founding of the Zuidhollandsche Sociëteit, in whose meetings, at first held annually, several problems were discussed, but especially the decline of many Lamist churches because of a lack of capable ministers. The suggestion of Rotterdam, supported by Leiden, to start a seminary for the education of ministers was rejected, the Haarlem delegates in particular opposing this plan. In the meantime the Amsterdam Lamist congregation had instructed Galenus (q.v.) Abrahamsz on Dec. 5, 1680, to train young men for the ministry, and in 1692, this Amsterdam church officially founded a seminary, which was led by Galenus Abrahamsz until his death in 1706. The proper task of the Zuidhollandsche Sociëteit having been realized, the conference was dissolved in 1694.

Besides its function in the training of ministers it also in its short life took care of catechetical instruction, mutual aid in filling pulpits, and subsidizing poor congregations. Moreover, Jan van Ranst (q.v.) of Rotterdam, as a delegate of the Zuidhollandsche Sociëteit, gave the impulse for the founding of a Mennonite conference in Friesland (FDS), founded in 1695.

Apart from the four congregations listed above, the following churches also joined the South Holland conference: Schiedam, Gouda, Delft, Brielle, Weesp-Overmeer, and Bunschoten. A few other congregations like Wormerveer, Krommenie, Medemblik, Monnikendam, Durgerdam, Alkmaar, and Utrecht also occasionally sent delegates to its meetings. vDZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 774-853; Blaupot t. C., Holland II, 90-93; DB 1872, 60-67; 1918, 49-56.

Zuidhorn: see Den Horn.

Zuidland, a hamlet on the island of Putten, Dutch province of South Holland, where there was a small Flemish Mennonite church, which in the 17th century was more or less united with the Geervliet (q.v.) and Spijkenisse congregation. It died out before 1700. It is uncertain when this congregation was founded; it may have existed in the middle of the 16th century. Jan (q.v.) Jansz Brant, of Zuidland, a Mennonite martyr, was executed at Geervliet in 1559. (Blaupot t. C., Holland II, 43.) vDZ.

Zuidlaren, a village about 10 miles south of Groningen (q.v.), where there has been a Kring (circle) of Mennonites since Nov. 2, 1950. This group (19 Mennonites and 8 interested non-Mennonites in 1958) is now incorporated in the congregation of Haren-Roden (q.v.), which was founded in 1954. vDZ.

Zuid-Limburg, the official name of the Dutch Mennonite congregation usually called Heerlen, where its meetinghouse and parsonage are located. The history of this church is found in the article Heerlen. To this article is to be added: G. Maathuis served as pastor until 1957 and was succeeded by J. Knot. The membership in 1958 was 172. vdZ.

Zuidveen, a hamlet in the Dutch province of Overijssel, until 1848 the seat of a Mennonite congregation, which in that year was named Steenwijk (q.v.). The Zuidveen congregation in the 17th and 18th centuries belonged to the Danzig Old Flemish (q.v.) Mennonites, a branch which included a small number of congregations in the Netherlands and which had regular contact with some Mennonite churches in Prussia, including Danzig. Concerning the history of the Zuidveen congregation there is not much information. Leenaert (q.v.) Bouwens is said to have founded this church c1560, but it is more likely that the neighboring Giethoorn-Noord (q.v.) congregation was the mother church of Zuidveen, which became independent after a number of Giethoorn members had settled here. Some of the members lived at Steenwijk as early as 1600. About 1600 these Mennonites at Steenwijk and Zuidveen were harassed by the Reformed magistrates of Steenwijk. Though exact figures were not available, it can be assumed that the Zuidveen membership was very small. In 1768 some dissensions arose in this congregation between a conservative and a more progressive part, which led to a schism in 1774. There were then two congregations at Zuidveen: (a) Danzig Old Flemish (Oude Huis) and (b) Flemish (Nieuwe Huis). In the (a) Oude Huis congregation, which held to the old principles and continued to practice footwashing, in 1775 consisting of only three families, Albert Hendriks (Bakker) was the last preacher serving 1761-1806. In 1819 the Giethoorn-Noord congregation took over the property of the Zuidveen Oude Huis and the care of the three remaining members. The meetinghouse was completely washed away by a flood in February 1825.

The separated (b) Nieuwe Huis congregation, which was closely connected with that of Giethoorn-Zuid, built a small meetinghouse, to which an old sister of the church, aged over 100, laid the foundation stone in early March 1774. This meetinghouse obtained an organ in 1806 and was enlarged in 1816. Ministers in this Nieuwe Huis were Reinders Pieters (Veen), from 1746 a preacher in the Oude Huis, from 1774 in the Nieuwe Huis, elder from 1796, serving until d.1801, followed by Floris Engel 1802-7, C. Leendertz 1808-14, and K. Hovens Grove 1814-62, during whose ministry the meetinghouse and parsonage at Zuidveen were abandoned in 1848 for a new church and parsonage at Steenwijk. Thereupon the dilapidated meetinghouse of Zuidveen was demolished (last service May 4, 1848). In 1774 the baptized membership of the Nieuwe Huis congregation numbered c20, 44 in 1804, and 135 in 1840. For the history after 1848 see Steenwijk. vdZ.

DJ 1850, 39 f.; DB 1878, 1-37; 1901, 16, 47; Inv. Arch.

Amst. II, 2392-95; Blaupot t. C., Groningen I, 102, 104, 218 f., 239; II, 68.

Zuidzijpe: see Zijpe.

Zur Heimath (1875-81), first published as an 8-page 8½ x 11½ monthly by David Goerz at Summerfield, Ill., as the official organ of the Mennonite Board of Guardians (q.v.) of which he was the secretary, and distributed free to Mennonite immigrants from Russia by the Board, February to December 1875. When Goerz moved to Halstead, Kan., in late 1875, he organized there the Western Publishing Co., which thenceforth published the journal as an 8-page semimonthly for a subscription price of $1.00, with slightly enlarged page size (1880-81 at 10½ x 15 in.). David Goerz was the editor throughout its history. Der Nebraska Ansiedler, a similar periodical published by the Mennonite Publishing Company beginning in June 1878, and transformed into Die Mennonitische Rundschau after two years (June 1880), was in a sense a competitor, and with J. F. Harms (q.v.), Mennonite Brethren minister, as editor, succeeded in separating a certain segment of the Russian Mennonite constituency in North America from Goerz's paper. The latter became increasingly the servant and organ of the Western District (GCM) Conference (q.v.), and finally merged with the Mennonitischer Friedensbote (q.v.) to form the Christlicher Bundesbote (January 1882) as the official German organ of the General Conference Mennonite Church. Zur Heimath announced its function in 1876 as being the bearer of reports on immigration and settlement, news out of Russia, and general material from near and far. Later it carried much news of congregational and conference activities as well as doctrinal and historical material. It carried an advertising section, particularly for the steamship and railroad companies interested in immigration. H.S.B.

Zurflüh, Abraham, was one of the leading Mennonite emigrants from the Bernese Jura to the United States. In early March 1852 Abraham Zurflüh, of Chaltet near Court, started out with a group from Münster. A letter written by him at Bluffton, Ohio, describing the status of the Swiss at that place and of the congregation in Putnam County, was published in 1889 in the Zionspilger. Until into the 20th century he corresponded with his brethren and relatives in the Bernese Jura. (ML IV.) S.G.

Zürich, city (1950 pop. 386,485; 1525, 8,000-10,000) and canton in northern Switzerland, the birthplace of the Anabaptist movement. The canton has since 1351 been listed first in the official list of cantons of the Swiss Confederacy. The city has been, through most of its history, the largest city and most important economic center in Switzerland. The city ruled the territory of the canton until 1803, when a democratic republic was established representing the entire cantonal population. Here the Swiss Reformation began with the work of Ulrich Zwingli (q.v.), who came to the city as the head pastor in 1519 and led the movement until his death at the Battle of Cappel in 1531. He was followed as leader by Heinrich Bullinger (q.v.), who served as head of the Zürich church 1531-d.75. From 1523 to 1798 the church of the canton of Zürich was a pure state church, with a Reformed theology, the Catholic forms of worship having been reformed in May 1525. Since then it is a modified state church.

The Anabaptist movement arose out of the circle of intimate friends and followers of Zwingli in Zürich, who, after failure to persuade Zwingli to establish a free church of believers only, introduced adult baptism on confession of faith on Jan. 21, 1525, in a meeting of some 15 men in the house of Felix Manz's mother on Neustadt Street. The leaders were two young citizens of Zürich, Conrad Grebel (q.v., d.1526 in Maienfeld) and Felix Manz (q.v., executed in Zürich in January 1527), together with Georg Blaurock (q.v., executed in 1529 in Tirol), a former priest of Chur. Grebel and Manz were both sons of prominent Zürich patrician families, both gifted university students, counted by Zwingli among his most devoted and promising followers. The break with Zwingli occurred after the second Zürich religious disputation in October 1523 and came gradually during the ensuing year as the state church policy of Zwingli became clear. For a detailed account of the Anabaptist beginnings see Grebel, Conrad, and Zwingli, Ulrich.

Vigorous suppression of the movement by force, climaxed in 1526 by the institution of the death penalty for teaching or preaching Anabaptism (Felix Manz the first victim), prevented the development of an organized Anabaptist congregation in Zürich at the beginning or later. The first congregation in the neighborhood was that in the adjacent village of Zollikon (q.v.), which existed from February to May 1525, and then was suppressed.

However, Anabaptism did develop into a substantial movement, though never very large, in several of the outlying districts of the canton, especially Grüningen (q.v.) on the east and Horgen (q.v.), Wädenswil, and Knonau on the south, although in the later 16th and early 17th centuries it is clear that all sections of the canton had some Anabaptists, rather thinly spread. It is almost impossible to locate specific and clearly organized congregations at any time, although the records occasionally carry phrases such as "the congregation in Grüningen," or "in Horgenberg," whereby it is not clear whether the total Anabaptist population of a district is meant, with several meeting groups, or a specific congregation with its own local ministers and one meeting (though rotating in location among the homes or barns, or in the forests).

The first center of the movement was apparently in the territory of Grüningen, the southeastern part of the canton, where Grebel, Manz, and Blaurock found a good response among the villagers in the summer and fall of 1525. By 1528, however, the promising growth had been broken here. Later the stronger areas were west of Zürich in the Horgenberg, Wädenswil, and Knonau districts.

The threat of the Anabaptist movement led to important measures of discipline in the Zürich state church whose purpose was to aid in detecting individual Anabaptists and making their key activities illegal. Among these was the introduction of the compulsory baptismal register on May 24, 1526, compulsory marriage in the church buildings (the Anabaptists married in their own conventicles), and in 1529 compulsory attendance at the state church service. The Anabaptists' justifiable criticism of the low moral state of the clergy as well as the population in general was met by sharp regulations against the most common vices and an elevation of requirements for the clergy. All these measures were combined and intensified in the sharp and comprehensive mandate of March 26, 1530 (Das grosse Sittenmandat), which included in its paragraph #9 a direct attack against the Anabaptists. This paragraph strictly forbade any help or housing for Anabaptists on pain of heavy penalties, for "the council will not tolerate them in any regard," and required all clergy and authorities to report at once every known Anabaptist who would separate himself from the church. The Anabaptists were condemned as leading to the "destruction of all authority." This was a decree by the civil state, designed in part to refute the bitter charges of the Catholic cantons that Zürich was tolerating this "vicious sect," but also designed to meet the threat of a movement which rejected the oath and all military service, although the Anabaptists denied under cross-questioning that they "preached against the state," and there is no direct evidence that they were charged at this time with reducing the military potential of the state in its struggle with the Catholic cantons. In 1531 Bullinger published his first book against them, Von dem unverschampten freyfel. His second book against them, Der Wider-töufferen ursprung, appeared in 1560.

The strict mandates led to further executions: Konrad Winkler, a preacher, on Jan. 30, 1530, Heini Karpfis of Grüningen and Hans Herzog of Stadel on March 23, 1532. In 1533, however, a less strict policy was adopted, in line with Bern and other cantons. In June 1535 the council received, on request, from the clergy of the city a declaration of counsel on measures to take regarding the Anabaptists, since the Anabaptists were increasing in number and preaching "in Grüningen, Wädenswil, and all along the lake."

This and other evidence belies the claim of Egli (90 f.) that the movement was dying out after 1530. Continued measures against the Anabaptists throughout the rest of the 16th century indicate that both church and state in Zürich took the movement seriously. Although no more executions took place until 1614, these measures included, besides imprisonment for longer or shorter periods, confiscation of property and expulsion from Zürich territory. Bullinger in particular had great, though misplaced, confidence, in sermons and other instruction to "root out the error," due certainly in part to his extraordinarily high evaluation of preaching as the means whereby God's election operated to reach individuals. Zürich's policy was in fact not so harsh as some of the other cantons, notably Bern, and only four executions took place in the canton, although a number died in prison later on.

One of the consequences of the persecution of the Anabaptists in Zürich as well as in other Swiss cantons was emigration to Moravia, where, except for two brief periods of persecution in 1536 and 1548, toleration by the authorities, as well as a vigorous church life, proved a great attraction. Missioners from the Hutterite colonies there frequently came to Switzerland to solicit immigrants, with considerable success, as the Hutterite Chronik repeatedly reports. In 1585, for instance, the Chronik says, "So many people came from Switzerland that at several places the doors had to be closed to them because not all could be received, though a good part of them were taken in." The years 1584-88 were a period of unusual emigration. On Aug. 18, 1584, at an eastern Zürich border point, a party of 50 headed for Moravia was apprehended. Not all the emigrants joined the Hutterite colonies, for there were congregations of Swiss Brethren in Moravia until well into the 17th century. Several times Hutterite emissaries were caught in Zürich. For instance, in 1574 three were arrested, questioned, and expelled. In 1584 "seven preachers" were sent to Switzerland, according to the Chronik. There is evidence also that at least a few similar emissaries came from the Netherlands, and took some Swiss Brethren back with them. In 1575, for instance, the Zürich archives report an Anabaptist preacher from the Netherlands preaching at various meetings near Bülach, "who had been there before." In 1584 there is specific mention of emigration to the Netherlands. In the mid-17th century there was also a strong emigration to Alsace and the Palatinate (see below).

The Zürich authorities wavered in their attitudes toward the Anabaptist emigration. At times they encouraged it and even expelled members of the group. At other times, as in 1576 (decree of Feb. 11), they forbade it. In all cases they forbade re-entry except to those who recanted and returned to the Protestant Church. It is worthy of note that the opposition to the Anabaptists by the state in one of the mandates was based almost exclusively on social and economic (not religious) grounds, such as their rejection of the oath, but especially their emigration with its consequent loss of wealth and manpower to the state and the weakening of the national defense through reduction of soldier material.

An interesting aspect of the relation of Anabaptists to the state church is the recognition by the authorities that the poor behavior of the Zürich clergy, both in morals and in performance of their preaching and pastoral duties, was one cause of the growth of Anabaptism. Repeatedly the failures of the parish clergy in the villages were castigated and measures taken for reform. On Aug. 4, 1585, for instance, the city council sent a message to the Zürich church synod, which was to be read twice yearly at the synod meetings, calling for vigorous reform and improvement of the clergy, since the lack of discipline and poor sense of responsibility of the clergy was the cause for the separation of "many pious, God-fearing people." Their failures, especially moral failures, were to be punished with imprisonment, suspension, or discharge. The conference of the four cantons on July 4, 1585, which had been called primarily to agree upon common measures against the Anabaptists, also decided on a long series of measures calling for a reform of the clergy as well as of the morals of the population in general.

Often the measures against the Anabaptists were of an economic nature. In addition to money fines, withdrawal of permission to participate in the economic life of the village or community was ordered, including denial of acceptance into a village upon attempted transfer from one location to another. Money fines were imposed freely. For instance, the first absence from the state church Sunday preaching service drew a fine of 20 batzen, the second 5 pounds, further absences up to 20 pounds. Attendance at Anabaptist services was fined one pound. Hospitality to an Anabaptist cost 10 pounds. An anonymous communication to the city council in 1560 with the title, "By what means Anabaptists may be resisted, and how the Anabaptists, especially their leaders, may be punished," advocated as the chief measure the imposition of money fines.

The continued repressive measures against the Anabaptists did not succeed in rooting them out of Zürich until after the middle of the 17th century. Neither imprisonment, confiscation, nor emigration brought about a surrender. Evidently the various measures authorized were not always thoroughly and relentlessly applied, even though the clergy were intense in their opposition to the Anabaptists; otherwise the persistence of the movement can scarcely be explained. It is true that no specific congregations can be identified and very few elders and ministers can be named throughout the entire 140-year history of Zürich Anabaptism, and no evidence has emerged of any general meeting or conferences of the entire body in the canton, nor have any records of the group itself survived except petitions or confessions submitted to the authorities. One of the latter is the "Grüningen Petition" (Grüningen Eingabe) of 1528 submitted by Jakob Falk and Heini Reimann, at that time in prison. Another is the petition of April 23, 1589, submitted by Andreas Gut of Affoltern on behalf of the brotherhood. A third petition, of 1589, possibly also drafted by Andreas Gut, entitled "Supplication an den Bürgermeister und Rat der Stadt Zürich von einigen Wiedertäufern," with the further title "Einfältig bekanntnus," treats five main points: the causes for the great division, the value of the Old Testament in comparison to the New, the relation of the fellowship of believers of the New Testament to those of the Old, the attitude toward the state and the holding of public offices, and baptism. The Zürich clergy replied to the "Bekanntnus" with a polemic document of its own, containing ten points of polemic description of the harmful influence of the Anabaptists upon the people, and pointing out their "opposition to the state," including nonswearing of oaths and rejection of military service.

The Anabaptist movement in Zürich experienced a moderate revival in members after 1600. Contributing to this was the serious estrangement between the general peasant population of the villages and the city population and government, which created a great deal of unrest, together with the continuing poor performance of the clergy. The sympathy of the people for the Anabaptists was so strong in some places, such as Grüningen, that it was practically impossible for the police to arrest them or to impose penalties. The magistrate (Vogt) of Wädenswil reported on Oct. 8, 1612, "that they have such a large following that no one wants to lay hands on them." Other reports indicate that the Anabaptists were well enough organized to have a charity fund for the aid of the poor, administered by a "treasurer (deacon?) which received legacies and gifts and even owned a small farm near Sihlbrugg (Hallauer-gütli)."

In January 1613 a new mandate was issued against the Anabaptists, which was largely a repetition of that of 1585. On the basis of this mandate attempts were first made to win over the Anabaptists peacefully through disputations or conversations. At the first disputation, which took place at Wädenswil (q.v.) on Jan. 26, the Zürich Burgermeister Rahn, aided by J. J. Breitingner, pastor at St. Peter's in Zürich, soon to be the leader of the Zürich church, represented Zürich, while the elders Hans Landis and Rudolph Bachmann and a preacher Galatz represented the Anabaptists. The meeting was fruitless. At the second disputation held at Grüningen on March 3, 1613, sixteen of the forty Anabaptists living in the area appeared, while Stadholder Keller, Vogt Grebel, and J. J. Breitingner represented Zürich. Again the meeting was fruitless. Accordingly the authorities now attempted to carry through the mandate, which was made more difficult by a decree of the council forbidding emigration. At last extreme measures were taken. Six Anabaptist leaders from Wädenswil and Horgen were arrested, among them Hans Landis (q.v.), who finally was executed the following year as the last Anabaptist martyr in Zürich. The Ausbund (from 1655 on) contains a hymn of 47 verses about him. Two of the remaining five emigrated, while three recanted (for the full account see Horgen). The first three had been sentenced to the French galleys but escaped at Solothurn before delivery to the French ambassador.

From 1613 on, J. J. Breitingner, serving as leader of the Zürich church and seeking in every respect to promote her highest welfare, prosperity, and unity, took the lead in measures against the Anabaptists. His chief concern in dealing with the Anabaptists was to maintain unity and prevent any significant loss of members or a schism. He was more moderate than some others in the actual measures undertaken, nevertheless carried through strongly. As a wise statesman he saw that the best way to meet the Anabaptist menace was to undermine the movement by removing some of its supposed causes, hence worked vigorously at a reform of the clergy, improvement of the school system, and better care for the poor. His point of view was dominant in the Aarau meeting of the Protestant cantons on Jan. 18, 1616, which decided to push a vigorous reform of the clergy as the best means of counteracting the Anabaptists. Strong measures, including heavy imprisonment up to lifelong terms, were, however, provided for leaders and for stubborn impenitent members. These measures succeeded in repressing the movement somewhat, and certainly prevented its further growth, but did not completely eradicate it.

After a period of relative quiet the final struggle with the Anabaptists took place in 1633-45. It was inaugurated with a census of the entire population in 1633, which produced a report (from the pastors) of a total of 182 adult (over 20 years of age) Anabaptists, distributed as follows: Affoltern 5, Bärentswil 11, Birmensdorf 11, Bonstetten 2, Cappel 3, Egg 1, Ellikon 8, Grüningen 2, Gryffensee 1, Hinwyl 7, Hirzel 46, Hausen 3, Maschwanden 5, Männedorf 11, Mettmenstetten 6, Ottenbach 3, Pfäffikon 3, Richterswil 12, Stallikon 12, Fischental 8, Wald 4, Wädenswil 8, Wetzikon 2, Wildberg 2, suspects 8. The true numbers were certainly higher than the 182 listed, according to Bergmann (104), who reports that some figures probably represent households, that three of the parishes reported a total of 117 children under 20, and that the Freie Amt had 50 Anabaptists in addition to many suspects. Bergmann believes that there were scarcely any Anabaptists in the city itself. It is interesting to note that the parishes of Birmensdorf and Bärentswil reported their Anabaptists to be very wealthy ("sehr wohlhabend").

On Dec. 28, 1635, four unnamed Anabaptist preachers were arrested and questioned fruitlessly, and after some months released. On Aug. 17, 1635, another disputation was arranged in Knonau, to which all the Anabaptists in the districts of Grüningen, Wädenswil, and Knonau were invited. Many appeared, but not all: 38 of the 58 in Knonau, 36 of the 71 in Wädenswil, 14 of the 61 in Grüningen. Later two disputations were held in the city, on Aug. 22 and Sept. 8, 1635. All discussions were fruitless; so the authorities concluded to try another tack. The individual Anabaptists were asked to reply in writing whether they were ready to recant or to emigrate. Four writings were received in Zürich, all negative, one from Knonau written by Rudolf Egli and bearing 20 signatures, one from Wädenswil written by Peter Bruppacher and bearing 9 signatures ("and many others"), one from Grüningen written by Hans Spori and bearing 9 signatures, one from Gryffensee and Kyburg with 17 signatures, and one from Männedorf with 23 signatures. Certainly the number of Anabaptists in the canton in 1635 must have reached 300 or more. The next step was to arrest most of the Anabaptists and place them in various prisons since the Zürich city prison did not have room. But soon practically all were either released or had escaped. In 1637 again large numbers were arrested. From these prisoners a petition for leave to emigrate was received, which listed a total of 70 men, 100 women, and some 300 children as prisoners. This step was taken with heavy heart, after 20 weeks of imprisonment; but permission was refused. After several months of very severe imprisonment the miserable prisoners escaped in March. Thereupon in the following weeks the police were sent on house searches to arrest the Anabaptists again, and to confiscate their cash and valuable household goods. Bergmann illustrates the suffering of the families by an account of what the family of Rudolph Egli had to go through, until the family finally emigrated to the Palatinate.

A moving account of the sufferings of the Zürich brethren is given in a report prepared for the Dutch Mennonites in 1645, possibly by Hans Müller of Edikon, or Jeremias Mangold. It forms a booklet of 27 pages of small type in small page format, which has been printed in every edition of the Ausbund printed in America, beginning in 1742, under the title Ein wahrhaftiger Bericht von den Brüdern im Schweitzerland in dem Zürcher gebiet wegen der Trübsalen, welche über sie ergangen sind, um des Evangeliums willen, von dem 1635 sten bis in das 1645 ste Jahr. Aside from the 4-page summary of the examinations of the prisoners in 1635-36 and the conclusion, it consists of a detailed account of the experiences of individuals in prison (and in part outside), organized under the heads of Klonau (Knonau), Wädenswil and Horgen, and Grüningen. The following persons are treated: Hans Meyli, Hans Müller, Rudolph Hägi, Hans Ringer, Heinrich Frick, Steffen Zänder, Dorothea Grobin, Catharina Müllerin, Heinrich Gut, Otilly Müllerin, Barbara Meylin, Barbara Kolbin, Elisabeth Meylin, Hans Landis, Hans Huber, Conrad Strickler, Hans Rudolph Baumann, Oswald Landis, Feronica Ableny, Jacob Rüsterholz, Felix Landis, Rudolph Sommer, Hans Asper, Werne Pleister, Ulrich Schneider, Gally Schneider, Rudolph Bachmann, Hans Jakob Heess, Hans Müller, Jakob Gochnauer, Jakob Egly, Georg Weber, Jakob Baumgartner, Ulrich Müller, Jakob Müssly (Nissly), Catharina Forrerin, Burckhard Ammen, Elisabeth Hützny, and Heinrich Schnebele. The following are named in the report as ordained ministers (bestellte Diener): Hans Landis of Horgenberg and Ulrich Müller of Kyburg; Rudolph Bachmann as elder (Aeltester), and Werne Pleister as ordained elder (bestellter Aeltester). (It is possible that "bestellter Diener" means elder, and "Aeltester" means deacon.)

The Anabaptist Commission, which had been set up in 1613 and charged with Anabaptist matters, now prepared a detailed account of their dealings with the Anabaptists, entitled Handlung und Ersprachung mit den Widertöeffern ihrer Irrtums wegen, which was published as a "Manifest" on Oct. 31, 1639, and distributed among the population of the countryside (probably identical with Wahrhafter Bericht Unsers des Burgermeisters des Kleinen und Grossen Rahts . . . der Statt Zürich . . . unsers handlungen gegen den Widertäuffern 1639). The Anabaptists replied with an "Antimanifest" (so named in the archives) entitled "Christenliche und Kurtze verantwortung der brüderen, dienern, und elisten im Zürich gebiedt über das büchlein oder manifest so ausgegangen in der Stadt und Landschaft Zürich," probably written in 1640.

In November and December 1639 the final heavy blow was struck. An order went out from the Anabaptist Commission to arrest all Anabaptists, confiscate all goods, and to declare all marriages annulled and all children illegitimate. This was done and the Anabaptists were crowded into the prisons, which had been emptied of criminals, and kept in complete isolation under the harshest conditions. All pleas for mercy were denied. The general population of the countryside, however, was deeply aroused by these measures. Attempts to sell the Anabaptist properties found few buyers, and no one was ready to take over their shops or businesses. In this time of great need the Zürich Anabaptists turned to their brethren in Holland, apparently through a family of Mennonite weavers in Zürich who had come from Holland, Hans Suner. Secret collections were sent from Holland to the prisoners as early as 1640.

The fruitless intervention of the Dutch Mennonites on behalf of their persecuted Zürich brethren in which they finally called on the Dutch government for help, continued for 20 years for Zürich, and for 50 years longer for Bern. Word regarding the Zürich persecution first reached the Amsterdam Mennonites in 1641, who at once made a connection with the prisoners through a Reformed (or Lutheran) merchant in Amsterdam, Izak Hattavier (q.v.). In 1642 a Reformed pastor in Amsterdam, Godefrius Hottonus, wrote to Zürich about the matter and on Aug. 21 received a lengthy letter from Breitingen. A paper war followed in 1643 over the Zürich persecution, between Petrus Bontemps (q.v.), a Reformed preacher of Haarlem, Joost Hendriksz (d. 1644), an Amsterdam Mennonite preacher, and A. D. Volbot (q.v., who used the pseudonym Gerard van Vrijburgh). On Feb. 15, 1645, Jeremias Mangold, no doubt a Zürich Anabaptist, sent to Holland a lengthy manuscript report on the Zürich persecution, which, together with a shorter report of February, written by Martin Meyli, was used by Van Bragt for a lengthy report in the Martyrs' Mirror (1660). The Zürich-Lied, with 49 stanzas, gives an account of the sufferings of the Zürich prisoners, written by one of them, Hans Rycker. It was published in a small songbook called Ein geistliches Liederbüchlein, which was published (for the first time?) in 1709 or later. The Dürsrüttlied follows it, which likewise gives an account of the Bernese Anabaptist persecution. At the request of the Dutch Mennonites, addressed to the States-General and to the Amsterdam City Magistracy, the States-General on Feb. 19, 1660, addressed a letter to the Zürich government requesting that Zürich permit the Anabaptists to emigrate with their goods. This petition was supported by the cities of Amsterdam and Rotterdam, and by the Knights-Proprietors of Alsace (whose support had no doubt been enlisted by the Mennonites there). To all of these Zürich answered negatively on July 20, 1660.

Much material on the persecution of the Zürich Anabaptists about this time is found in several other sources. The Mangold report of 1645 is apparently the one printed in full in the Ausbund (first in the 1742 Germantown edition). An extract of the Zürich Anabaptist archival documents covering Feb. 3, 1639, to Jan. 9, 1643, prepared by Hans Kaspar Suter, probably at the request of the Bernese authorities, appears in two copies in the Bern Staatsarchiv. A similar comprehensive report secured by the Bern Anabaptist Commission in 1659 from the Zürich Anabaptist Commission also appears in the Bern Staatsarchiv. J. H. Ottius, Annales Anabaptistici, pp. 204-360, also gives many details in often lengthy items, particularly for 1609-70.

On April 23, 1641, the captives escaped from prison, though many were recaptured. Gradually matters quieted down again and once more the Brethren thought that perhaps an implicit toleration might be their lot, but not so. After the close of the Thirty Years' War in 1648, when immigrants were desired to repopulate southern Germany, most of the Zürich Anabaptists emigrated, along with numerous Reformed families. They settled largely in the Palatinate. A few remained behind as relatives of prisoners with life sentences or for other reasons. In 1654 two brethren named Schmid and Frick underwent examinations and in 1656 Frick finally was freed after 27 months of imprisonment, whereupon he emigrated to the Palatinate. The official records show that a total of 119 Anabaptists left for the Palatinate and Alsace in 1656-57, while some 1,076 Reformed followed the same route. Further records show that among the 4,130 who had emigrated in 1657-61 there were 49 Anabaptists with 70 children.

So the might of the Zürich state after 140 years finally succeeded in exterminating the Anabaptist movement in the land of its beginnings. But Zürich Anabaptism lived on in foreign countries, first in the Palatinate, and finally in Pennsylvania, whither a large number of Palatine Mennonites emigrated in 1707-56. It is probable that 75 per cent of the Mennonites of the Lancaster Mennonite settlement established in 1710-17 consisted of original Zürich families, instead of those of Bernese origin as has been hitherto too easily assumed. Among them are such well-known families as Landis, Brubacher, Snyder, Miller, Weber (Weaver), Hess, Gochbauer, Bauman, Bachmann, Good, Nissley, Snavely, Hege, Huber, Strickler, Kendig, and Graff.

The Zürich Anabaptists have been treated in three literary works, two by major writers, all dealing with the earliest period. Gottfried Keller, an outstanding Swiss novelist, wrote the Novelle Ursula (q.v., 1878); Cäsar von Arx, the leading contemporary Swiss dramatist, wrote Brüder in Christo (q.v., 1947); and Erich Diebold, a Swiss journalist, wrote the novel Folge dem Licht (1945; see Literature). Heinrich Bullinger's two major works of 1531 and 1560 against the Anabaptists became standard sources and greatly influenced both official and popular attitudes. Being polemic writings, they contain little purely historical material. They are fully treated under the articles Von dem unverschämten fräfel und Widertoufferen Ursprung. H.S.B.

TA Zürich; Emil Egli, Die Zürcher Wiedertäufer zur Reformationszeit (Zürich, 1878); Cornelius Bergmann, Die Täuferbewegung im Kanton Zürich bis 1660 (Leipzig, 1916); L. von Muralt, Glaube und Lehre der Schweizerischen Wiedertäufer in der Reformationszeit (Zürich, 1938); Walther Köhler, "Die Zürcher Täufer," Gedenkschrift zum 400jährigen Jubiläum der Mennoniten oder Taufgesinnten 1525-1925 (Ludwigshafen, 1925); Max Stiefel, Die kirchlichen Verhältnisse im Knonaueramt nach der Reformation, 1531-1600 ("Die Wiedertäufer," 152-67) (Affoltern, 1947); Müller, Berner Täufer; Wahrhafter Bericht Unsers des Burgermeisters . . . der Stadt Zürich. Worinnen gründlich dargethan wirt, theils jüngster unsers handlungen gegen den Widertoufferen (Zürich, 1639, copy in GCL, AML; Dutch editions at Amsterdam 1643 and 1644, both in AML); Noedigh Onderzoek op den Brief Geintituleert Waerachtigh Verhael, Van de handelighen der achbare Magistraet van Zürich, tegen eenighe weder-doopten (n.p., 1643, in GCL, AML); J. C. Mörikofer, J. J. Breitingen und Zürich (Leipzig, 1874) 149-56; M. H. Brackbill, "On the Origins of the Early Eighteenth Century Pennsylvania Mennonite Immigrants," MQR XXVII (1953) 78-82; Ausbund (Lancaster County, Pa., 1949), 837-65; Mart. Mir. E 1103-5, 1108-24, 1133, 1138, which gives much of the same material as in the Ausbund appendix.

Zurich Mennonite Church (MC) located in the village of Zurich, Huron Co., Ont., about 2 miles east of Lake Huron, affiliated with the Ontario Conference, was organized on March 26, 1908, by former members of the Amish congregation near by. Christian Schrag was ordained minister on Feb. 18, 1911. Other ministers with date of ordination were Stephen M. Peachey 1935, Gordon Schrag 1937, Cyril Gingerich 1951, Albert Martin 1949, and Hubert Swartzentruber 1958. Stanley Sauder was licensed to serve as pastor of the Thames Road congregation at Exeter, an outpost of the Zurich congregation. In 1959 the congregation had 148 members, with Albert Martin as bishop-pastor. R.S.K.

Zürich-Lied, a historical hymn of 49 stanzas of 4 lines each, written by Hans Rycher, commemorating the suffering of the Anabaptists imprisoned in the Oetenbach prison in Zürich in 1639-40 ff. Six men are named among the unnamed others: Felix Landsman (Landis?), Rudolf Sommer, Der Pfister (Pfeister?), Ulrich Schneider, Jakob Erni, and Rudolf Bachmann. Verse 35: "Sie giengen auff der Propheten Weg, da Christus auch ist gangen, sie haben verlassen Haab und Gut, und sind gar lang gefangen." Verse 36: "Das ihren viel gestorben sind, in diesem Ungewitter. O Herre Gott, wir klagen dir, der Streit ist hier gar bitter." Verse 39: "Sie haben mit wainen säyen thun, von nun der Herr wird kommen, Mit Frewden werden sie wieder kon, und bringen ihren Saamen."

The Zürich-Lied appears as the sixth of nine hymns in a small 40-page booklet entitled Ein Geistliches Lieder-büchlein (Gedruckt in diesem Jahr). The Goshen College Library possesses two editions, one bound in with the 1686 German edition of the Dordrecht Confession (1632), Christliche Glaubens Bekenntnis, and a collection of prayers and several small song collections, the other bound with the 1691 edition of the same book. The only indication of time is found at the end of the third hymn in the collection, which is signed "B.B.B. 1709," and according to the last verse was written by a prisoner in Bern. The seventh hymn is the Dürsrüttlied (q.v.), which tells the story of the seizure of a congregation of Anabaptists with their preacher Uli Baumgartner in 1659 in Dürsrüttli in the Emmenthal in the canton of Bern. The eighth hymn is the noted Haslibacherlied (q.v.), which tells the story of the martyrdom of Hans Haslibacher at Sumiswald, canton of Bern, in 1571. H.S.B.

Zurkinden, Nikolaus (1506-88), secretary of the council of Bern, Switzerland, in 1534, and magistrate (Landvogt) in Bonmund and Nyon in 1537-44, was one of the outspoken advocates of tolerance in the Reformation period. In a letter to Calvin written on Feb. 10, 1554, he advocated a milder treatment of the Anabaptists.

Albert Ed. Bähler, Nikolaus Zurkinden von Bern 1506-1588 (Zürich, 1912); Müller, Berner Täufer, 76; ML IV.

Zusterkring (Sister Circle), a Dutch name for women's organizations. From before 1890 in a few Dutch Mennonite congregations (Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Utrecht, Zwolle) there were women's circles which were active on behalf of missions; at the same time a women's circle of Zaandam-Oost was active in visiting the sick members of the church. Since about 1920 women's circles have been started in nearly all of the Dutch Mennonite congregations; some have two or three. Some of these are sewing circles for relief or in behalf of missions; some are social associations; and some are groups for religious education. Most women's circles now cultivate religious education as well as practical and social activity.

In 1949 nearly all Dutch Mennonite women's circles were organized into the General Federation of Women's Circles (in 1958 c3,500 members). Annual delegate meetings are held at Elspeet (q.v.). A general meeting was held at Amsterdam, Sept. 2-3, 1954, with 2,600 Mennonite women attending. There are also regional associations in Friesland and Groningen. vdZ.

Zutphen, a town in the Dutch province of Gelderland (pop. 24,000, with 106 Mennonites), the seat of a Mennonite congregation. Concerning the history of Anabaptism-Mennonitism at Zutphen there is little information. Early Anabaptism seems to have had few adherents here in the 1530's, but there was some Anabaptist activity in 1548, when the magistrates discovered that the schoolteacher Claes (q.v.) van Leeuwen had been an Anabaptist; his corpse was exhumed and burned, and his wife Cornelia (q.v.) was executed in 1549. A few others of the small group saved their lives by flight. Not until 1613 is mention made of Mennonites at Zutphen; in that year there were two Mennonite congregations here, one Flemish and one Waterlander, which may have been founded in the 16th century. The Flemish congregation was represented at the Flemish conference at Haarlem in 1649. During the 17th century the Mennonites of Zutphen, as of most other towns, were often disturbed by the local magistrates at the instigation of the Reformed clergy. Not until 1697 did they acquire a meetinghouse, having held their meetings in the homes of members and later in an attic on a back street. In 1697 they bought a warehouse on Molenstraat and remodeled it as a meetinghouse. It is not certain whether this is the same meetinghouse as the church on Apesterth, which was later used, remodeled in 1802, enlarged in 1852, and used until 1940. A new church was built on Leeuweriklaan, dedicated on Dec. 10, 1940.

The congregation was always small: c60 baptized members in 1700, c30 in 1740, 12 in 1770, 47 in 1847, 117 in 1900, 160 in 1958. Samuel Muller served here as pastor 1806-11, followed by E. D. van Lennep 1810-11, after eight years of vacancy C. Loosjes Overbeek 1819-38, J. de Liefde 1839-47, A. J. van Pesch (assistant pastor) 1844-48, J. Bodisco 1850-d.72, B. Cuperus 1873-90, S. J. Dekker 1891-1901, S. D. A. Wartena 1902-9, R. Schuurisma 1910-29, M. Onnes Msz 1929-46, and J. A. A. Meijer since 1946. This small congregation had the misfortune of being at variance with some of its preachers: Jan Francken was suspended in 1731 because of misconduct; Hendrik Gortinga, who was an Orangist, whereas nearly the whole church sided with the Patriots (q.v.), was bought out in 1795; Jan de Liefde's pietism caused much unpleasantness from 1843 until he retired in 1847. The pastor of Zutphen has since 1956 also served at Winterswijk.

Among the old Mennonite families are the Schimmelpennincks (q.v.), usually wine merchants, and particularly the de Haas family, whose members were for 200 years pillars in the Zutphen congregation. To this family, which died out in the male line in 1878, the congregation owes much, both spiritually and materially; many of its members served as deacons. vdZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 349, 353a, 1152; II, Nos. 1524-26, 2396-2433; II, 2, No. 679; Mellink, Wederdopers, 292 f.; Blaupot t. C., Holland I, 245 note 1, 330; II, 48 f., 205, 231; DB 1861, 148; 1881, 40-63; 1901, 146-63; 1909, 109-14.

Zuttere, de: see Sutter(e) (Sitter), de.

Zuttere, Pieter de: see Overd'hage, Petrus.

Zwaagwesteinde, a village in the Dutch province of Friesland. Mennonites living here in the 17th and 18th centuries belonged to the Kollumerzwaag (q.v.) congregation. As more and more of the members moved to Zwaagwesteinde and because the meetinghouse at Kollumerzwaag was dilapidated, a new meetinghouse was built at Zwaagwesteinde, dedicated on May 5, 1816. The congregation was then generally called Zwaagwesteinde and Kollumerzwaag, or simply Zwaagwesteinde. After the death of the (untrained) preacher A. H. Bosma in 1838 the pulpit remained vacant, and in 1844 the few members who were left joined the neighboring Dantumawoude (q.v.) congregation. In 1897 S. D. A. Wartena, the pastor of Veenwouden (q.v.), started catechetical instruction here, and in 1904 the 47 Mennonites living at Zwaagwesteinde, members of Veenwouden and Dantumawoude, organized a Kring (circle), which built a meetinghouse in the same year. Services were held at Zwaagwesteinde by the pastors of Veenwouden and Dantumawoude and others. In 1949 the Kring Zwaagwesteinde became an independent congregation. The membership in 1958 was 66, served by the pastor of Veenwouden. Church activities include a ladies' circle, a youth group 18-25, Sunday school for children, and a choir. (DB 1903, 164-70, 187; 1905, 30, 192 f., 199; DJ 1949, 34.) vdZ.

Zwaardemaker (Swaardemaker), a Dutch Mennonite family, originally living at Zaandam, where many of its members have served as deacons in the Zaandam-Oost congregation. In the second half of the 17th century Claes Jansz Swaardemaker was an elder of the Zaandam-Oost Waterlander congregation. He was a well-to-do businessman and an influential leader in the church, who was often called to serve in other congregations. In 1674 he intervened in the Wormerveer (q.v.) Waterlander congregation, when dissensions had arisen there. Dirk Zwaardemaker (1791-1838) and his brother Hendrick (d. 1841) were trustees of the A.D.S., as was Dirk H. Zwaardemaker (d. 1896); all three were manufacturers at Zaandam. K. Zwaardemaker, a lawyer at Bussum, was a trustee of the A.D.S. 1908-d.14. Some Zwaardemakers were deacons at Haarlem and Amsterdam. vdZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. I, No. 781b; II, No. 592; Blaupot t. C., Holland I, 271; II, 67, 68; N.N.B.Wb. I, 1317 f., VI, 1354.

Zwaardgeesten, a name given to the followers of Jan van Batenburg (q.v.).

Zwanzigerweide, a village in the Stuhm (q.v.) Lowlands in West Prussia (q.v.), Germany. In 1892-1929 the Mennonite congregation in this area was called Zwanzigerweide. Before 1892 and after 1929 it was called Tragheimerweide. For its history see Tragheimerweide.
vbZ.

Zwarte Kerkje, Het, in the Dutch province of North Holland, was formerly the seat of a Mennonite congregation, of which nothing is known but that it was dissolved before 1700. (Blaupot t. C., Holland II, 45.)
vbZ.

Zwartewaal, a hamlet in the Dutch province of South Holland. Mennonite activity is mentioned here about 1568, when Hans Busschaert preached. Probably later on there was a congregation, for at least in 1622 Mennonite services were held at Zwartewaal. Among the Mennonites of Zwartewaal were the Arkenbout family. (Inv. Arch. Amst. I, No. 415; information by A. A. Arkenbout of Rotterdam.)
vbZ.

Zwartsluis, a town in the Dutch province of Overijssel (pop. c.3,300, with 41 Mennonites), seat of a Mennonite congregation, concerning whose beginning and history little is known. In April 1648 the States of Overijssel discussed whether Mennonite meetings held in Zwartsluis should not be forbidden; but obviously church life went on. Most members were engaged in shipping. The membership was always small: (figures of the 16th-18th centuries not available), 40 in 1840, 47 in 1861, 31 in 1900, 21 in 1958. The present meetinghouse was built in 1842; the organ is of 1881. As early as 1724 the congregation, subsidized by the Lamist church of Amsterdam, was served by a salaried (untrained) minister called from outside. From 1809 the Zwartsluis congregation received financial support from the Dutch government, the first Dutch Mennonite church to which such a contribution was given. Untrained ministers served here until 1860, the last two of whom were Jan Geerts van Wierum 1788-d.1825 (he died of shock because of a severe flood which destroyed his books) and Harmen Wybes Woudstra 1826-d.60. The first graduate of the Amsterdam seminary to serve here was A. Snellen 1861-67, followed by J. P. Müller 1867-72, C. Leendertz 1873-75, Tj. Kielstra 1876-85, who from 1880 on also served at Meppel (q.v.) as did his successor H. Koekebakker Jr., who served at Zwartsluis 1886-d.90. The pulpit then remained vacant until 1896. The agreement with Meppel lasted only until 1892. S. van der Goot served at Zwartsluis 1896-98, followed by A. de Vries Mzn 1898-1903, W. Koekebakker 1904-09, M. Huizinga, Jr. 1910-14, and P. Ens 1915-16. In 1917-41 Zwartsluis was served by the pastors of Meppel and since 1942 by those of Kampen.
vbZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. II, Nos. 2434-55; Blaupot t. C., Groningen I, 65; II, 105, 239; DB 1861, 174; 1880, 166 f.; 1881, 48; 1882, 118 f.; 1893, 137; 1901, 5.

Zweibrücken, Palatinate, Germany, an industrial city (pop. 25,725) located 20 miles southwest of Kaiserslautern on the edge of the Saar district and only 5 miles from the French (Lorraine) border to the South. It was the capital of the former independent duchy of Pfalz-Zweibrücken (a tiny 400 sq. mi. principality) from 1410 to 1799, when its ruler Maximilian became King of Bavaria. Whereas there were Anabaptists in the district of Bergzabern in the eastern part of the duchy (see Zweibrücken, Duchy of), in the immediate area of the city of Zweibrücken there are no evidences of the movement.

In the 17th century, following the close of the Thirty Years' War (1648), Swiss Mennonites from the canton of Bern began to come to the duchy and by 1680 had established a congregation which later became known as Ernstweiler (q.v.) because in 1843 it built a meetinghouse in this village very near to the city of Zweibrücken. It was for a time known as "the congregation at Zweibrücken." The Namensverzeichnis of 1857 lists the congregation as Zweibrücken (163 baptized members) with Christian Lehmann, Sr. as elder (ord. 1819). An Amish congregation also developed here which came to be known as Ixheim (q.v.), because in 1844 a schism resulted in one faction building a meetinghouse in that village, which is now a suburb of Zweibrücken. (The first Amish settlers apparently came from Alsace after Louis XIV had expelled the Mennonites from France in 1712.) It was in existence as a congregation at least by 1759 since it sent two delegates to the Amish Conference at Essingen near Landau in that year, and again to the second Essingen Conference of 1779; both times it is listed in the minutes as the Zweibrücken congregation. It is listed in the Dutch Naamlijst of the 18th century usually under the name Hirschberg-Kirschbach (q.v.), probably after some of the meeting places used by the congregation. However, the 1888 Mannhardt Jahrbuch lists the congregation as Zweibrücken-Ixheim, with 226 baptized members and Joseph Stalter as elder.

The modern Zweibrücken congregation was formed in 1937 by the merger of the Ernstweiler Mennonite and Ixheim Amish congregations. It is a subsidiary to the Kaiserslautern congregation, as Ernstweiler was before 1937, even though it has (1957) 200 baptized members. Services are held in a rented hall in the city, served by Theo Hotel, the Kaiserslautern pastor. Since 1949 the members of the congregation living in the Saar district have been organized as the Saar congregation, with 252 (1957) baptized members.
H.S.B.

Zweibrücken Catechism, a name popularly given to the edition of the Elbing catechism of 1778, Kurze und einfältige unterweisung aus der heiligen Schrift, which was published at Zweibrücken in the Palatinate, Germany, in 1856 and reprinted there in 1880. The large size, prestige, and age of the Zweibrücken Amish congregation gave additional prestige to the Catechism, which was translated into French and published at Nancy, France, in 1862 and several times thereafter, and became the standard French Mennonite catechism. No original catechism was ever produced or printed at Zweibrücken. H.S.B.

Zwickau Prophets, the name given to three men, Nicholas Storch (q.v.), Thomas Drechsel (q.v.), and Marcus (Thomae) Stübner (q.v.), who came to Wittenberg from Zwickau, Saxony (Germany), about Christmas time in 1521, professing a special message through their study of the Scriptures and through direct revelation from God through the Holy Spirit. They had been influenced by Thomas Müntzer (q.v.), a Lutheran preacher in Zwickau from 1520 to April 1521, recommended by Luther, and had advocated to the textile workers of Zwickau, the proletariat of that industrial city, the establishment of a church of members filled with the Spirit and exercising the ban, equipped with revelation through the "Spirit," while God would destroy the unrighteous. "The laity must become our priests and prelates" was one of his slogans. Annemarie Lohmann, however, holds that it was Storch whose spiritualistic-Taborite ideas influenced Müntzer away from his Lutheran course into radicalism. The Zwickau prophets came with this spirit to Wittenberg and for a time exerted substantial influence even on Melanchthon and Amsdorf. Storch soon left Wittenberg to continue his agitation at other places for several years (e.g., 1524 in Strasbourg and Hof), while Stübner stayed longer and won a number of followers, among them Dr. Gerhard Westerbürg (q.v.) and Martin Cellarius (q.v.). Then he too disappeared from the pages of history. Carlstadt (q.v.), the leader at Wittenberg during Luther's absence at the Wartburg (April 1521 to March 1522), agreed on some points with the men from Zwickau but was not of their party.

No church nor movement was established by the Zwickau prophets, but as early as 1530 the theory arose, without any historical foundation to be sure, that Anabaptism was founded by Nicholas Storch in Zwickau. Melanchthon was apparently the first to make this assertion in a letter of February 1530 to Friedrich Myconius, in which he wrote of "Storch and his following, to whom the entire Anabaptist tribe owes its beginning," although he also had the Zwinglians originate in Storch: "Thus from one stork have arisen all those factions of Anabaptists and Zwinglians." Luther in his foreword to Menius' Von dem Geist der Wiedertäufer (1544) even connected the origin of the Anabaptists with Carlstadt and Zwingli.

The earliest writings of Switzerland and South Germany about and against the Anabaptists have nothing to say about a Saxon or Thuringian origin of the Anabaptists in 1521-22. Urbanus Rhegius of Augsburg, one of the very first to write against the Anabaptists (September 1527, Wider den Newen Taufforden), says nothing of the Zwickau origin of Anabaptism. Zwingli knows nothing of such an origin in his writings of 1525-27. In his first book of 1530, Von dem unverschämpten fräfel, Bullinger knows only that Anabaptism is a revival of the ancient heresies of Novatian, Auxentius, and Pelagius; not until his book of 1560, Der Widertöufferen Ursprung, the first chapter of which is titled "Von dem Ursprung des widertoufs, harlangend von Thomas Müntzern und dessen verkehrter ufrürscher leer," does he speak of its origin "down there in Saxony in 1521 and 1522," naming Storch and Müntzer. Sebastian Franck's Chronica (1531) reports only on South Germany. Nor does Johannes Gast of Basel show any idea of a connection of the Swiss and South German Anabaptists with Saxony and Middle Germany in his De Anabaptismi exordio (Basel, 1544). But all the later historiographers are agreed in their construction of history: the Anabaptist movement began with Storch and Müntzer. Thus Arnold Meshovius says in his Historiae Anabaptisticae (Cologne, 1617): "In my opinion Nikolaus Pelargus (Storch) . . . were some who were leaders (Karlstadt, Melanchthon, Gerhard Westerbürg, Markus Stübner, Gabriel Zwilling, Cellarius, Thomas Müntzer)." Of his "Seven Books" the first is devoted exclusively to Wittenburg and Zwickau. It is interesting to note that Meshovius reckons Melanchthon among the Anabaptist leaders, not without some justification if doubts concerning infant baptism are to be considered a mark of Anabaptism. To mention an author of the following century (almost any other would do as well) we cite Ehre-Gott Daniel Colberg, professor at the University of Greifswald, whose book was published in Leipzig in 1710, Das Platonisch-Hermetische Christentum begreifend die historische Erzählung vom Ursprung und vielerlei Sekten der heutigen fanatischen Theologie Unterm Namen der Paracelsisten, Weigelianer, Rosenkreutzer, Quäker, Wiedertäufer, Bourignisten, Labadisten und Quietisten. Chapter IX deals with the Anabaptists, and Section 2 has the heading, "Ursprung der Wiedertäufer. Claus Storch, Thomas Müntzer, Heinrich Pfeiffer." J. C. Füssli in Beiträge zur Erläuterung der Kirchen-Reformation des Schweizerlandes (Vol. I, 1741, p. 109) reflects the position of the historiography of the time in his rejection of the attempt of the Dutch Mennonite historians (especially Schijn) to prove the Waldensian origin of the Anabaptists, saying, "Most historians agree that Anabaptism had its origin from Nicolaus Storch and Thomas Müntzer. . . . We will hold with the majority that the Anabaptist sect had its origin from the above restless heads until something else is proved." Füssli knows that Sebastian Franck's Chronica (1531) knew nothing of the Saxon origin of Anabaptism but had it arise during and after the Peasants' War of 1524-25 and in the South; but he rejected this theory, especially because Bullinger in his Reformationsgeschichte had "proved" the opposite.

In the 19th century Johannes Hast is typical, the very title of his book betraying his position: Geschichte der Wiedertäufer von ihrer Entstehung zu Zwickau in Sachsen bis auf ihren Sturz zu Münster in Westfalen (Münster, 1836). Richard Heath called his book Anabaptism from its Rise at Zwickau to its Fall at Münster (London, 1895); but E. B. Bax, with a similar title, Rise and Fall of Anabaptism (N.Y., 1903), specifically rejects the Zwickau origin. Richard Bachmann titled his pamphlet of 1880: Nicolaus Storch, der Anfänger der Zwickauer Wiedertäufer. Examples could be taken at random to illustrate the continued prevalence of this theory in the 19th century and later. Karl Holl (Luther und die Schwärmer, 1923), Karl Heussi (Kompendium der Kirchengeschichte, 10th ed., 1949), and the modern editions of the main encyclopedias (Calwer Kirchenlexikon, 1941; Der grosse Brockhaus, 1935; Encyclopedia Britannica, 1936) continue the theory. C. A. Cornelius with his thorough work, Geschichte des Münsterischen Aufbruchs, Vol. II: Die Wiedertaufe (Leipzig, 1860), however, finally abolished it and placed the real origin in Zürich. Many important research scholars have followed him.

Under the designation "Anabaptist" the enemies of the Anabaptists of 1525 sought to include all who stood in opposition to the main line of the Reformation on whatever ground, i.e., the entire "left wing." After the Münsterite affair of 1535 the Protestant leaders were convinced that the Anabaptist movement was fanatical-revolutionary in essence, and was accordingly a threat to the existing socio-political order for both state and church. One cannot do justice to their attitude toward the Anabaptists without recognizing this fact. Roland Bainton's latest Luther biography makes this very clear.

In the 16th century the word "Anabaptists" denoted simply the enemies of the truth, opponents of God and His cause, the greatest threat to the existing order, the state, and Christendom. They were considered to be a "devilish sect" of "satanic origin," to be mercilessly eradicated. This was the advice of Luther, Melancthon, Zwingli, and others to their princes and city councils, and this was the procedure actually followed. (Philip of Hesse was a notable exception.) The representatives of the church and the theologians and historians of later times apparently simply copied these concepts and if possible strengthened them, without considering the sources or the Anabaptists themselves. Nicholas Storch and Thomas Müntzer were the first to attack the Protestant cause from within, and they rejected infant baptism; hence they must have begun the Anabaptist movement. No evidence of factual connections with the later real Anabaptists was needed. H.S.B.

H. S. Bender, "The Zwickau Prophets, Thomas Müntzer, and the Anabaptists," MQR XXVII (1953) 2-16; Paul Wappler, Thomas Müntzer und die Zwickauer Propheten (Zwickau, 1908); Annemarie Lohmann, Zur geistigen Entwicklung Thomas Müntzers (Leipzig, 1931).

Zwicker, Daniel (1612-78), an oculist of Danzig, and for a time a member of the anti-Trinitarian Polish Church (q.v.). In 1648 the Hutterite bishop Andreas Ehrenpreis (q.v.) had sent missionaries to Danzig who contacted members of this Socinian church. Zwicker, a recent member of this church, was profoundly impressed by the Hutterite plea for the primitive Christian form of communal life. A lively correspondence with the Hutterites ensued, of which we have at least three Ehrenpreis letters to Zwicker (of 1649, 1650, and 1654), and one each to Zwicker's friends Hans Martin (1648) and Jobst von Stein (1649), all dealing with the doctrine of the Trinity and defending the principle of community of goods. Zwicker, a rather restless intellectual, decided to visit a Hutterite community. Thus in 1654 (not 1644, as Wilbur has it) he set out with three other men from Danzig to visit Ehrenpreis in Sobotiste (q.v.), Slovakia. After a stay of not more than ten days, studying the Rechenschaft by Riedemann (q.v.) and other doctrinal writings, he decided to join the brotherhood, in spite of his mental reservations concerning the doctrine of the Trinity. Strangely enough, Ehrenpreis, though well aware of these reservations, was glad to receive Zwicker into the brotherhood, and waived certain affirmations. He was at once made a minister and "missionary to Poland." When he left, Ehrenpreis gave him a handwritten chronicle of the Brethren (Codex "E" in Beck's description, today in Hamburg) that he might be better informed if asked to give account.

Upon his return to Danzig, Zwicker set to work immediately to promote some sort of fusion of the Polish Unitarians and the Slovakian Anabaptists, claiming the moral superiority of the Hutterites. But he was not very successful, for he was ably opposed by two members of the Polish church, Martin Ruarius and Ludwig von Wolzogen. Zwicker concealed the fact that he had accepted membership in the Hutterite brotherhood by affirming the Trinitarian doctrine. He gave the appearance that all he wanted was a loose union of the two groups whereby the Danzig church would have to accept only the communal form of brotherhood living, an ideal once held by his Polish coreligionists. Ruarius convinced his church that Zwicker's proposals were not feasible. Eventually, in 1656, the Danzig Socinian church expelled Zwicker. From 1657 to his death in 1678 he lived in Amsterdam, where he was well received. In the Netherlands Zwicker traveled extensively. He was suspected of Socinianism; he criticized and censured several churches including the Mennonites for their spiritual decay, later even defending the views of Christian Entfelder (q.v.) that it was better not to join any church, and disputing particularly in Collegiant (q.v.) meetings. Some Collegiant Mennonites like Jacob Jansen Voogd (q.v.) opposed Zwicker's views, but others were influenced by Zwicker to leave the church. Zwicker published a number of books, among which were De noch Staende en Triompherende Sichtbare kerkcke Christi (Amsterdam, 1660), opposing Galenus (q.v.) Abrahamsz, and his most radical work, Irenicon Irenicorum (n.p., 1678), translated from Latin into Dutch by his follower Adriaan Swartepaert, under the title Vredeschrift der Vredeschriften (1678). Zwicker died in 1678 at Amsterdam. It is not known how the Hutterite chronicle in his possession got to the Hamburg City Library. R.F., vDZ.

Zwicker's life and work has never been thoroughly studied; the best treatment thus far is by Stanislaus Kot, Socinianism in Poland, the Social and Political Ideas of the Polish Antitrinitarians (Warsaw, 1932, English translation by E. M. Wilbur, Boston, 1957) 157-63 and 201 (based on extensive original research); E. M. Wilbur, A History of Unitarianism; Socinianism and Its Antecedents (Cambridge, Mass., 1946) 573-75, also 510 note; R. Friedmann, "The Encounter of Anabaptists and Mennonites with Anti-Trinitarianism," MQR (1948) 161-62; Beck, Geschichts-Bücher, 486-92; Chr. Sepp Polemische en Irenische Theologie (Leiden, 1882) 131, 134; W. J. Kühler, Het Socinianisme in Nederland (Leiden, 1912) 218-21; C. B. Hylkema, Reformateurs, 2 vols. (Haarlem, 1900, 1902) passim; K. O. Meinsma, Spinoza en zijn Kring (The Hague, 1896) 196-99; H. W. Meihuizen, Galenus Abrahamsz (Haarlem, 1954) 81. The Ehrenpreis letters are to be published in a future volume of Anabaptist epistles, possibly in 1960.

Zwinger, Hans (Hänsel), a Hutterite preacher, a tanner, therefore called also Gerber, who died in 1568 at Wostitz in Moravia, was the author of the song, "Wollen singen zu dieser first," which commemorates the suffering of Hans Arbeiter (q.v.) and Heinrich Schuster (q.v.). E.H.B.

Beck, Geschichts-Bücher, 253; Wolkan, Lieder, 230; Zieglschmid, Chronik, 367, 397, 426; ML IV.

Zwingli, Huldrych (Ulrich) (1484-1531). Though not the most qualified scholar, the wisest churchman, or the most intelligent theologian in the Swiss-South German Reformation, Huldrych Zwingli was beyond challenge the movement's most significant personality, and merits, if anyone does, the name of father of Reformed Protestantism. As befits a genius, Zwingli shows more vitality than unity in his life and thought; his life is a series of turning points and his doctrinal system shifted with the years. The present article is interested in these movements primarily with respect to their relation to Anabaptism, of which Zwingli is in a certain sense also the father.

From his birth in 1484 in the home of a respectable citizen of Wildhaus (Toggenburg), Swiss canton of St. Gall, through his theological and humanistic studies (Master's degree from the University of Basel, 1506, further study at Vienna) and ten years of priestly service in Glarus (1506-16), Zwingli betrayed nothing of a reformer's character, nor was he even especially religious. By birth and training a patriot, whose first writings argued against the current Swiss practice of sending young men into foreign mercenary service and against Swiss subservience to foreign powers, he nevertheless received a papal pension himself and served as chaplain in foreign wars.

In 1516 Zwingli moved decidedly into the camp of Erasmus. This meant first of all the adoption of a kind of patriotic-humanistic pacifism, further strengthening his antagonism to Swiss involvement in foreign wars. Allegiance to Erasmus meant further a more specifically Christian orientation in his humanism, turning somewhat from the noble and morally noncommittal Greco-Roman antiquities to a rediscovery of the New Testament and the purer, simpler, more demanding faith it portrays. Zwingli himself always referred to 1516 as the major change in his spiritual experience. In this attitude Zwingli preached, still unquestioningly within Roman Catholicism, at the pilgrimage center of Einsiedeln (1516-18) and at the Grossmünster in Zürich, where he began his ministry as the head pastor of Zürich in January 1519. In Zürich he began to preach straight through the Gospel of Matthew and other New Testament books; expository preaching and the development of the city's schools were his program for Christian-humanist renewal.

The second major change in Zwingli's understanding came in 1520. News of Luther's excommunication had come to Zürich. It was becoming evident that the hopes of Erasmus and his friends that through the recovery of the Scriptures all Catholicism could be renewed were to be disappointed. The recovery of the New Testament Gospel and the maintenance of the unity of the church, the two goals which Erasmus and Luther had hoped to keep together, were suddenly posed as alternatives, thanks to Rome's intransigence. Zwingli had to make a choice which, though its implications were then not clear, made the difference between Erasmus and Luther, humanism and Reformation.

Zwingli's "Pestlied," a poem describing sin and salvation in terms of deadly sickness and recovery, is often interpreted as evidence of a sort of "conversion" during the time of his own serious illness during an epidemic of pestilence in the winter of 1519-20. This is probably incorrect, but the general tone of the song is witness to a deepening in his faith and understanding which was going on during these Erasmusian years, brought about as much by his own study of Paul as by Luther's influence. The clearest evidence of Zwingli's deepened insight and commitment is a letter written in late July 1520 to Oswald Myconius, then serving as a teacher in hyper-Catholic Lucerne. Zwingli gathers together all the New Testament references to suffering as the fate of Jesus' disciples. He contemplates seriously the possibility of Luther's being put to death and his own banishment, yet there is no turning back and no opportunistic search for halfway measures. "Born in blood, the church can be restored in no other way but by blood." Though he did not yet draw from this insight all the logically possible consequences, Zwingli's view of the church as a persecuted little flock in a hostile world was new and explosive.

This is the mentality with which Zwingli undertook steps toward Reformation, which were far more than a reorganization of the humanities curriculum. He abandoned his own papal pension and led Zürich to withdraw her alliance with Catholic France and to forbid her sons to serve as mercenaries. In 1522 he blessed with his presence a notorious breach of the lenten fasting regulations, and late in the same year resigned his priesthood and was re-employed by the city council as evangelical pastor, continuing in the same preaching post he had occupied before. During this time he gathered around himself a circle of enthusiastic younger humanists and clergy, several of whom (Grebel, Manz, Reublin, Brötli, Stumpf, qq.v.) were later to provide the backbone of the Anabaptist movement.

The Zürich Council obviously needed to justify its unprecedented move of installing a preacher who had just renounced Rome. According to the custom of the times this was done in the form of a disputation, to which all Christian Europe was invited. The disputation was held in January 1523, on the basis of 67 theses submitted by Zwingli. Johannes Faber, vicar of the Bishop of Constance, to whose diocese Zürich belonged, refused to participate in the main portion of the debate since he challenged the competence of a city council either to convoke such an assembly or to rule on its results. Thus a ruling in Zwingli's favor was a foregone conclusion. Yet the council's decision was basically a conservative one: there was no abolition of the Mass or formal recognition of the Reformation. Zwingli was simply authorized to go on preaching the Gospel. From this point—even though there was no commitment made by the council—dates Zwingli's confidence that the council could be counted on to carry through all of the Reformation, and his consequent willingness to be satisfied with the pace set by the state's refusal (June 1523) to modify tithes legislation; abolition of the Mass deferred from October 1523 to May 1525; evangelical communion celebrated four times yearly instead of daily as Zwingli asked, and changed in form and significance by excluding the congregation from the speaking of the liturgy and by rejecting the connection with the ban.

At the cost of this willingness to compromise Zwingli was able to obtain and to consolidate a pro-Reformation majority in the council. The last pro-Catholic reaction within the city was crushed by the legally irregular execution in October 1526 of the patrician Jakob Grebel (father of Conrad), and from then on until just before his death Zwingli gained constantly in political influence, to the point of practically replacing the democratically elected Great Council by a Secret Council of which he was the dominant member. In this capacity he laid plans to destroy the Swiss Confederacy and set up a new union dominated by Zürich and Bern, as well as an anti-Hapsburg alliance stretching from Venice to Denmark, led by Zürich and Hesse and including the old enemy France. In 1529 Zürich was ready for a war to reshape the Confederacy, and in fact seized most of northeastern Switzerland from the Abbot of St. Gall, but the First War of Cappel ended in a truce without a battle. The second phase of the war found Zürich disunited and ill-prepared when it broke out in 1531. Zwingli accompanied the city's troops to the battlefield of Cappel, where his life, the battle, the war, and all hope of extending the Reformation to more of Switzerland were lost. A few weeks before his death Zwingli had attempted to resign his post in Zürich, because of growing opposition to his political leadership, but had been prevailed on to stay at the helm.

Zwingli and the Anabaptists. During 1523 Zwingli's younger associates became uneasy over their leader's concessions to the conservatism of the political authorities. When in December he finally promised to institute the Lord's Supper with or without state approval and then backed out of his bluff, not to raise the question again for over a year, the impatience could no longer be stemmed by the claim that the concessions he was making were purely tactical, and there began to grow around Conrad Grebel and Felix Manz a circle of dissenters, who in January 1525 were to be driven to found a new church (see Zürich).

The first of Zwingli's writings to attack the growing group of dissatisfied disciples within his own camp was his Who Gives Occasion for Rebellion . . . (Wer Ursach gebe zu Aufruhr) of December 1524. The main thrust of this tract is its attack on the bishops and princes whose injustice truly provokes revolutions. In addition, however, Zwingli refers to four distinct groups which profess allegiance to the Reformation but misunderstand its intent. One of these—and not the most dangerous in his judgment—is the circle of those “who are more bloated with the knowledge of the Gospel than they are on fire with love” and who in addition to their narrow-minded spiritual pride reject infant baptism. Already the main lines of Zwingli's defense of infant baptism are visible; arguing that the New Testament does not speak to the issue, he concludes that the identity of baptism with Old Testament circumcision is sufficient proof.

These arguments are repeated in Zwingli's On Baptism, Rebaptism and Infant Baptism of May 1525. The impossibility of the Anabaptist appeal to New Testament teaching and usage is assured by declaring that the word “baptism” has numerous distinct meanings in the New Testament, so that it is illegitimate to reason from any one New Testament utterance to another. The most basic distinction is that made between “inner” baptism (subjective faith) and “outer” (water) baptism, which renders illusory any attempt to correlate the two. Since the essential claim of the Anabaptists was precisely that faith and water baptism must be bound together, Zwingli's dualism, building on philosophical postulates which he considered unchallengeable, seemed to be a sufficient answer. Freed from any connection with personal faith, baptism may then be equated with circumcision as the sign of a child's being externally reckoned to belong to God's people.

On the Preaching Office (June 1525) reports that Anabaptists from Zürich were ranging over the whole countryside, demanding rebaptism, and attacking the resident village pastors because they were supported by prebends and did not move about like apostles. Zwingli defends the resident ministry and the traditional means of support on New Testament grounds, and rejects as irrelevant the argument that all Christians should prophesy (I Cor. 14) or that all are priests (I Pet. 2). It is an offense against canon law for the Anabaptists to have taken their objections elsewhere after having been condemned in their home jurisdiction (Zürich). Zwingli reports that the Anabaptists are self-called and claim a private possession of the Holy Spirit mediated neither by Scripture nor by the church; he thus fails to grasp the issue which was truly at stake, namely, where the church was which was empowered to govern and to send. The Anabaptists did not reject the church, as Zwingli's whole argument assumed; they believed rather that their fellowship of committed believers was the church and that the “Milords of Zürich,” who thus far had barely begun the Reformation, were not the church.

Zwingli seems to have felt that these two pamphlets had adequately settled the issues involved in Anabaptism, for from this time on, his writings deal with the continuing battle with Catholicism and the beginning debate with Lutheranism about the sacraments. (Zwingli's Answer to Balthasar Hubmaier's Book on Baptism . . ., printed in November 1525, was written hastily, at the request of friends, and adds nothing to the debate.) The conflict with Anabaptism now moved to the level of practical politics. Zwingli's personal attitude toward the increasingly repressive police measures taken by the authorities (prison February 1525; money fines and torture late 1525; death penalty and banishment decreed in 1526 and applied in 1527) has not been adequately studied. On the one hand he seems to have urged moderation and to have intervened personally in favor of some prisoners, yet at the same time he is reported to have preached that repression is the duty of a legitimate government; and in view of his dominant role in Zürich's public life one can hardly conceive of these measures being taken against his will or without his approval.

Zwingli did not return in his writings to Anabaptism until two years later, when two Anabaptist documents came into his hands. One, which he calls a "confutation," is known only because he reproduced it in the process of answering it; it is a direct response to his own arguments and may have been written by Conrad Grebel. The other is the "Brotherly Union" of Schleithem. Zwingli's In Catabaptistarum Strophas Elenchus of August 1527 is his last word on Anabaptism, except for scattered references in his general doctrinal writings. It adds nothing to the argument on baptism but offers numerous historical side lights and represents his only reaction to other aspects of the Anabaptist position (oath, government, ban). Zwingli's interests now clearly lie elsewhere. He has no more personal contacts with Anabaptists, dealing with them only on the basis of writings or of rumor; the Elenchus is the epilogue to a chapter already closed.

How Zwingli's relation to Anabaptism should be understood depends largely on one's prior theological commitment. Grebel spoke for all the Anabaptists with the claim that "Zwingli led us into this" and only backed away from his own vision later because of fear. This claim is objectively confirmed in that Zwingli did conceive of the church as a visible, suffering minority between 1520 and 1522, a position which Anabaptism retained while he abandoned it. On the other hand, Zwingli saw an unbroken continuity in his own total work, and applied to the Anabaptists the harsh words of I John, "They went out from among us, but they were not of us." Where between these two claims the truth lies will probably depend on the significance attributed to the "turning point" in mid-December 1523, when Zwingli took a position which he had said a week earlier would make him "guilty of lying before the Word of God." J.H.Y.

Zwitsers (Zwitsersche Doopsgezinden, Oude Zwitsers, Nieuwe Zwitsers): see Swiss Mennonites in the Netherlands.

Zwolle, capital of the Dutch province of Overijssel (1953 pop. 52,500, with 368 Mennonites), seat of a Mennonite congregation. Anabaptism was found here as early as 1533, then bearing a strongly marked revolutionary character. Jan (q.v.) van Geelen was in Zwolle in January 1535. Among the many Anabaptists active here was Harman (q.v.) Hoen. Cornelis (q.v.) de Vlaminck, a deacon of the early Anabaptist congregation of Amsterdam, was executed at Zwolle in 1535. In 1544 there was still some revolutionary activity here. A Mennonite congregation of Zwolle is first mentioned in 1574, but Mennonite meetings had been held here at least by 1562. About 1600 there probably were three Mennonite congregations here—Flemish, Waterlander, and High German—but these groups merged before 1649. The united church, sometimes called Flemish and sometimes Waterlander, was represented at the Haarlem Flemish conference in 1649 by Hendrick Theunis, Wynant Jansz, and Thomas Schimmelpenninck. In 1674 the Zwolle congregation joined the Zonist (q.v.) Conference. Though there never was an Old Flemish congregation at Zwolle, the Groningen Old Flemish preachers Ubbo Meertens and Lubbert Jansz Kremer (q.v.) preached here in 1754 to large audiences. A meetinghouse was probably built in 1638 or shortly after on Wolweversstraat on the site of the present Mennonite church. It was remodeled in 1708, and enlarged in 1846; its organ was secured in 1907. The Zwolle congregation possesses two silver communion cups from 1661, one from 1670, and one from 1851. An old people's home on Koestraat was used until 1781 and then sold. A special hymnal, the Zwolsche (q.v.) Bundel, has been used here since 1808.

Concerning membership little is known; the baptized membership numbered 34 in 1706, 40 in 1796, 170 in 1861, 340 in 1926, 280 in 1958. Members of the old Stroink family are still found here; formerly there was also the Schimmelpenninck (q.v.) family, many of whose members were deacons. The small congregation of Zwolle in 1672 contributed 414 Dutch guilders for the Swiss Mennonites and again a considerable gift in 1710, and later also in behalf of the Prussian Mennonites.

Until 1695 the congregation was served by untrained and unsalaried ministers chosen from the membership; the first salaried minister was Abraham Blijdenstein, serving from 1700. The conservative leader Jacobus Rijdsdijk (q.v.) served at Zwolle 1723-28. The first minister educated at the Amsterdam seminary to serve here was Thomas Menalda, 1771-d.94. Assuerus Doyer (q.v.), a beloved pastor, served 1795-d.1838. He was followed by L. ten Cate Coster 1833-58, T. Kuiper 1859-62, A. Vis 1862-66, J. Kerbert 1867-84, S. Cramer 1885-90, A. G. van Gilse 1890-1922, W. H. toe Water 1923-38, A. P. van de Water 1939-42, Miss C. Soutendijk 1942-46, and J. Meerburg Snarenberg from 1947. Church activities include two women's circles and a Sunday school for children. vDZ.

S. Elte, "Godsdienstige conflicten in Zwolle . . . 1580-80," in Verslagen en Mededeelingen Overijsselsch Regt en Geschiedenis 1936; Mellink, Wederdopers, 282-90; Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 84, 134, 267, 886, 1117; II, Nos. 2456-71; Blaupot t. C., Groningen I, 18, 96 f., 143 note 1, 150, 215 f., 239; II, 127, 185 f.; DJ 1840, 44; 1850, 41 f.; DB 1861, 174; 1875, 54 f.; 1882, 108 f.; 1900, 115; 1903, 149; N. van der Zijpp, Geschiedenis der Doopsgezinden in Nederland (Arnhem, 1952) 109, 242 note 17; Algemeen Doopsgez. Weekblad XI (1956) No. 13.

Zwolsche Bundel (Zwolsche Liederen): see Vervolg van Christelijke Gezangen.

Zwolsche Fonds (Zwolsche Weduwfonds), a fund for the pensioning of the widows of Mennonite pastors, founded at Zwolle in 1810. In 1897 this fund merged with the Fonds (q.v.) ter Ondersteun- ing (North Holland Relief Fund for the Pensioning of widows and Orphans of Mennonite Pastors). (Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 985 d-ag.) vdZ.

Zwolsche Kas: see Zwols(ch)e Vereeniging.

Zwols(ch)e Ring, an association of Dutch Mennonite congregations for mutual aid in case of pulpit vacancy, founded shortly after 1860. At present the following congregations belong to the Ring: Zwolle, Kampen, Blokzijl, Zwartsluis, Meppel, and Steenwijk. vdZ.

Zwols(ch)e Vere(e)niging, a Dutch Mennonite conference, was founded on June 2, 1858, at Zwolle as the "Vereeniging van Doopsgezinde gemeenten in Overijssel, Gelderland, Utrecht en van naburige in het Koninkrijk Pruisen." The purpose of it was to bring more closely together the scattered Mennonites which had not yet been organized into a regional conference. Annual meetings were held to discuss questions pertaining to these churches. By 1861 17 congregations had joined, 15 Dutch and two German—Cleve and Emmerich; by 1871 it had 19 congregations. In the meetings of 1875 and 1876 the question whether to include the congregations of South Holland and Zeeland was discussed. This had no practical result at this time, but in 1879 Rotterdam joined the conference, and in 1883 The Hague, and gradually all the churches of South Holland and Zeeland joined, as well as the newly established congregations of Wageningen, Zuid-Limburg, Eindhoven. At the meeting of 1885 it was decided to call the conference the "Zwolsche Vereeniging." Accounts of the annual meetings of 1870-95 were published in DB (except 1878 and 1894).

The Zwolsche Vereeniging took important initiatives: in 1887 it decided to publish a Mennonite weekly (see Zondagsbode), and in 1892 Tj. Kielstra, pastor of Middelburg, raised the question of doing something for Mennonites in the Diaspora, which led to a church ministry to them (see Verstrooiing). The conference also founded the Zwolsche Kas, a treasury to subsidize poor congregations, which functioned until 1946, when its activity was taken over by the A.D.S. vdZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 966, 1,000g; DB 1861, 104 f., 113 ff.; 1876, 118; 1877, 138; 1884, 137 f.; 1888, 137; 1889, 117 f.; De Zondagsbode XLVI (1932-33), Nos. 39-41.

Zylis: see Zelis.

Zytse Dirckx: see Sytze Dirks.

Supplement

Aalst, a town (pop. 43,000) in the Belgian province of East Flanders, was the seat of a Mennonite congregation for a few years about 1539, in which year Rosiane (q.v.) 't Kemels was executed here. The congregation was soon extinguished by persecution.

vdZ.

A. L. E. Verheyden, "La Réforme à Alost pendant le XVI^e Siècle," in Revue Belge de Philologie et d' Histoire XXIX (1951) 1151-62.

Abbotsford (B.C.) Church of God in Christ Mennonite Church was first listed in the Yearbook (CGC) for 1950. In 1958 it had 190 members, served by ministers Frank P. Wiebe, A. W. Baerg, and A. J. Wilson.

M.G.

Abendfrieden home for the aged: see Pinneberg.

Aberdeen, Sask., is a district of the Rosenort Mennonite Church. The town of Aberdeen is on the right side of the South Saskatchewan River, and Rosthern, the main part of the Rosenort Mennonite Church, is on the left side of the river. The Rosenort Mennonite Church was organized here in 1907, with C. C. Ens as the first minister. In 1957 the membership was 130, with Frank D. Koop as minister.

J.G.R.

Academy: see Bible Schools and Preparatory Schools.

Achterhofje, the appendix of several Dutch Mennonite hymnals: see Lusthof des Gemoets, Rijper Liedt Boecxken, and Stapel, Claes.

Adams Mennonite Brethren Church is a rural church west of Adams, Okla. Organized as the Hooker M.B. Church in 1905, with 30 members, its first leader was H. S. Voth. Its meetinghouse was dedicated in 1906. Several years ago the present name was adopted. The membership in 1957 was 117, with Abe D. Unruh as pastor.

M.G.

Adler, Clemens (d. 1536), a Moravian Anabaptist of Austerlitz belonging to the Stäbler (q.v.) party of Jakob Widemann, which later became the Hutterites. On April 12, 1529, he completed the writing of a very important extensive manuscript (apparently never published), which bears the title Das Urteil von dem Schwert mit unterschiedlichem gewalt Dreier Fürstenthum der Welt, Juden, und Christen, mit Anderen Anliegenden sachen. It exists in only one manuscript copy made c1729, which was found in 1951 by Samuel Geiser (Brugg bei Biel, Switzerland) in the possession of a Mennonite family near Langnau, canton of Bern, which has been transcribed and of which copies are now in BeCL and GCL.

In the preface the author indicates that his purpose is to distinguish the various ages of history and to delineate correctly the difference between the kingdom of God and the kingdom of this world. Christ is the king of peace and the king of righteousness. The church has the power of the keys to discipline its members and to maintain the high standard of the "order of Christ." Adler's writing is a thoroughly nonresistant work, and of high quality. He also treats briefly community of goods and the oath.

It is strange that Adler's name does not appear in the Hutterite Chronicle. It is known from other sources that he died in 1536.

H.S.B.

Samuel Geiser, "An Ancient Anabaptist Witness for Nonresistance," MQR (1951) 66-69 and 72.

Adlig Pokraken: see Pokraken.

Adriaen Kerstantsz, of Maasland, an Anabaptist martyr, was executed at Leiden, Holland, on July 14. Particulars are lacking. (Mellink, Wederdopers, 206.)

vdZ.

Adriaen de Kleermaker (Adriaen Cornelisz Snijer), an Anabaptist martyr of The Hague, was beheaded there on April 10, 1535. Particulars are lacking. (Mellink, Wederdopers, 208 f.)

vdZ.

Adriaen Wouters, an Anabaptist martyr, of Schiedam, was beheaded on Oct. 14, 1539, at Veere in the Dutch province of Zeeland. Particulars are lacking except the fact that he was banished from the province of Holland. (Mellink, Wederdopers, 225, 324.)

vdZ.

Adrian (Minn.) Amish Mennonite Church, now extinct, in Nobles County, Minn., about 15 miles northwest of Worthington. On Nov. 19, 1893, Jacob Gascho was ordained to the ministry in this congregation, the first members of which came from Canada in 1891. Beginning in March 1893 the congregation held services every two weeks. In early 1894 the community numbered 12 families and 30 members. The Family Almanac of 1900 names Joseph Gerber as an O.O.A. bishop, and Jacob Gascho, Joseph Grieser, Joseph Jantzi, John J. Miller, John Rupp, Joseph Schantz, and D. D. Schlabach as Amish ministers. In 1913-16 these ministers were listed as Conservative Amish Mennonite. In 1917 no Amish preachers were listed in Minnesota, nor these men named in any other Amish or Mennonite lists.

M.G.

Adriel School, West Liberty, Ohio, a child welfare school, established in 1957, capacity 37, sponsored by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities (MC): see Orphans' Home.

Aecht Mathys, the wife of Willem Dirksz Bystervelt, an Anabaptist martyr, was executed with her husband at The Hague, Holland, on March 16, 1535. (Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 744 f.) vdZ.

Aechte Coenen, an Anabaptist martyr, drowned at Leiden, Holland, on July 14, 1544. She was probably a follower of David (q.v.) Joris. (Mellink, Wederdopers, 206.) vdZ.

Aefke Harmen Thysdochter, captured during the assault of the Oldeklooster (q.v.), was drowned at Leeuwarden, Friesland, on April 14, 1535. (Vos, Menno Simons, 229.) vdZ.

Aegje Elinxdochter, an Anabaptist martyr, drowned at Alkmaar, Holland, on Feb. 1, 1536. (Mellink, Wederdopers, 172.) vdZ.

Aernt (Arent) Gerytsz, a revolutionary Anabaptist who participated in the Poeldijk (q.v.) disturbance, was beheaded at The Hague, Holland, March 14, 1536. (Mellink, Wederdopers, 219, 221.) vdZ.

Afrika-Missions-Verein (Africa Missionary Society) was organized in 1934, reorganized in 1935, as a private Canadian Mennonite Brethren mission board to operate the Bololo, Congo, Mission. On Jan. 1, 1944, it turned the work over to the Foreign Mission Board of the M.B. Conference. The Bololo Mission had been founded in 1933 as a private faith venture, but when the Conference Mission Board refused to take it over in spite of the appeals of the missionaries, the Society was organized to do so. The Society was managed by a board of directors with the following officers: G. J. Reimer secretary, and H. H. Janzen chairman. Its organ was Der Kleine Afrika-Bote, 1935-43. H.S.B.

G. W. Peters, The Growth of Foreign Missions in the Mennonite Brethren Church (Hillsboro, 1947) 97-103.

Agape is the organ of the Mennonite Relief and Service Committee (MC), in 1959 a 6-page 9 x 12 in. monthly, first number April 1955. It reports on and promotes interest in Voluntary Service, I-W Service, Relief Work, and related fields of service. H.S.B.

Agape Verlag, with headquarters at Starenstrasse 41, Basel, Switzerland, was established in 1956 as a subsidiary of the Mennonite Publishing House, Scottsdale, Pa. Its chief publication to date has been the series of summer Bible school manuals in German and French, which was prepared by a corps of editors originally appointed by the MCC. The manuals are basically translations from the English manuals published at Scottsdale. The European Advisory Committee represents the interests of the South German, Swiss, and French Mennonite Conferences. The work was begun c1950, but the name "Agape Verlag" was not adopted until 1956. H.S.B.

Aibonito Mennonite Church, Aibonito, Puerto Rico, was founded in 1958. It had 12 members, with a supply ministry. H.S.B.

Aibonito, Puerto Rico, Mennonite General Hospital (MC), a 32-bed general hospital, is controlled by a local board approved by the Health and Welfare

Committee of the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, Elkhart, Ind. It was established in 1944 as the La Plata Mennonite Hospital but in March 1957 was moved to the new Aibonito hospital building. Two thirds of the cost ($415,000) of the building was paid by public funds and one third by private monies. In 1958 five doctors and eleven nurses were on its staff, with George D. Troyer, M.D., the chief of staff. John Driver was chairman of the local committee and Mervin Nafziger the administrator. M.G.

Ailsa Craig Boys Farm, located one mile south of Ailsa Craig, Ont., and 24 miles northwest of London, Ont., operated by the Mennonite Central Committee on behalf of the Mennonite Churches of Ontario represented in the Conference of Historic Peace Churches, was established in 1955 as a home for the rehabilitation of delinquent boys. It is supported by contributions from the Ontario Mennonites and funds from the Ontario Provincial government. The CHPC appoints an advisory council and provides the channel for the Mennonite financial support. H.S.B.

Alaska Mennonite Mission (MC) was founded in 1952 by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities. In 1958 it had one station at Russian Mission, with one self-supporting missionary couple. H.S.B.

Alberta Community Church (GCM), Portland, Ore., began in 1928 at NE 26th and Alberta streets. The following summer the Alberta Community church building was rented. The work was sponsored by the Pacific District Conference and the Home Mission Board (GCM). On June 29, 1931, the congregation was organized with 11 charter members. In 1938 the Home Mission Board purchased the building in which the congregation had been meeting and remodeled it. The following have served the church: Catharine Niswander, Albert Claassen, Edmond Miller, Arnold Regier, Henry Wiebe, Clyde Dirks, and Harry Albrecht, the minister in 1958, in which year the membership was 74. C.K.

H. D. Burkholder, The Story of Our Conference and Churches (n.p., 1951).

Alberta Mennonite Health Society was organized in 1932 as a mutual aid organization to cover medical expenses of its members, who live within 16 miles from Coaldale, Alta., the headquarters. The membership has varied from 100 to the present number of 380. Annual charges have varied from $12.00 to the present $92.00 per family. It serves both the M.B. and the G.C.M. groups. Ja.Kl.

Alberta Mennonite Home for the Aged, Coaldale, Alta., is owned and operated by the Provincial Conference of the Mennonite Church of Alberta (GCM). The home, dedicated April 11, 1955, has a capacity of 14 guests and accepts them from anywhere in Alberta. Jacob J. Andres has served as superintendent of the home from its beginning. M.G.

Alberta Mennonite Relief Society was organized in 1946 at the instigation of C. F. Klassen to aid Russian Mennonite refugees stranded in Germany, but later devoted itself to aiding the settling of these refugees in Alberta, and to collecting money for relief needs in Paraguay. It serves both the M.B. and G.C.M. groups throughout Alberta. J.A.K.L.

Alberta Mutual Aid Society is a branch of the Alberta Mennonite Relief Society which provides fire and storm insurance for its members at the rate of 15¢ per $100.00 property value. It serves both the M.B. and G.C.M. groups throughout Alberta.

J.A.K.L.

Alberta-Saskatchewan Mennonite District Mission Board (MC) was authorized in 1920. Among its first active members were Allan Good and Jacob Brenneman. E. S. Hallman served as its president 1920-28, followed by M. D. Stutzman 1928-. It consisted of nine members in 1958 and sponsored five mission stations in Alberta. M.G.

Alderden, an old and well-known Mennonite family at Aalsmeer, Holland. Maarten Willemsz Alderden was a preacher of the Frisian Mennonite congregation in the early 18th century and Jacob Maartens (probably his son) an elder of the same congregation c1720-60. A number of Alderdens have served as deacons. vdZ.

Alde(r)werelt, van, a Dutch Mennonite family, whose ancestor Cornelis van Alderwerelt fled from Meenen (q.v.) in Belgium c1580 to Middelburg (q.v.) in the Dutch province of Zeeland, where he was a cloth merchant and probably a deacon of the church. He was married to Cathelijne Pleviers (Plover), who may have been a daughter of the martyr Lenaert (q.v.) Plover. Their son Jan van Alderwerelt moved to Amsterdam, where he and his descendants were cloth merchants. Some of them were members of the Flemish congregation, others joined the Waterlanders. Salomon van Alderwerelt (c1624-79) was one of the authors of Ontdeckte Veinzing (1655), two pamphlets published anonymously against Galenus (q.v.) Abrahamsz. The van Alderwerelt family left the Mennonite Church in the early 18th century. vdZ.

Nederl. Patriciaat VII (1916) 8-14, XLII (1956) 23-43; Meihuizen, Galenus Abrahamsz (Haarlem, 1954) 201 f.

Alexander (Man.) Mennonite Brethren Church was organized in 1929, although meetings for worship were held in Griswold beginning in 1926. In 1929 a meetinghouse was purchased in Griswold, and until 1954 when a meetinghouse was erected in Alexander it was known as the Griswold M.B. Church. The first leader of the congregation was H. Penner, then A. B. Friesen, and in recent years J. J. Krueger. In 1959 the membership was 81. H.S.B.

Alexandrabad was a sanatorium on the bank of the Dnepr River in the Ukraine, Russia, near the Chortitza settlement. It was established in 1907 by the Wiener brothers after the pattern of a Dresden sanatorium. Later the industrialist J. Niebuhr purchased and enlarged it. It served the Mennonite constituency and the surrounding population as a health and summer resort. C.K.

D. A. Hamm, "Das Gesundheitswesen in Chortitza," Menn. Life X (1955) 86.

Algeria Mennonite Mission (MC) was founded in 1957 under the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, at which time the Miller Stayrooks were appointed missionaries. In 1958 they were residing in Kouba (Alger), Algeria. The Robert Stettens were appointed to this field in 1958.

A small group of Pax men was sent in 1955 to do reconstruction work in the area of the earthquake of 1954, under the administration of the Mennonite Relief and Service Committee. In 1956 the work was concentrated in the village of Flatters, where 30 or more houses were built by 1959 when the work was drawing to a close. H.S.B.

Allegheny Conference News: see Southwestern Pennsylvania Conference News.

Allegheny Mennonite Conference Mission Board (MC) was organized in 1913 to operate city and rural missions in its territory, among which the Altoona and Johnstown city missions have been prominent. H.S.B.

Allianz-Bibelschule (1905-18), Berlin, Germany, a Bible institute founded by the Baptist Karl Mascher, the Englishman Broadbent, and others, closely related to the Plymouth Brethren, and attended by numerous Mennonites from Russia 1907-14, among them Abraham Braun, later minister at Ibersheim, Rhenish Hesse. The school was moved to Wiedene in 1918, where it is still operating. H.S.B.

All-Russian Union of Towns: see Sanitätsdienst.

All-Russian Union of Zemstvos for Relief of Sick and Wounded Soldiers: see Sanitätsdienst.

Allukrainische Konferenz der Vertreter der Mennonitengemeinden in der USSR convened as a last general conference on a regional scale in Melitopol Oct. 5-9, 1926. The program indicates that the leaders were fully aware of their task and prepared to meet the challenge of the day. A total of 84 representatives met, mostly of the Ukraine, 64 of whom were Mennonites and 19 Mennonite Brethren and Evangelical Mennonite Brethren. Fourteen representatives came from outside the Ukraine: Samara 3, Caucasus 2, Crimea 2, Siberia 3, Orenburg 2, Ufa 1, and Turkestan 1. Two government representatives were present.

The chairmen of the Conference were Jakob Rempel, Johann Töws, Peter Nickel, and Jakob Pätkau. First the KfK gave a report, after which the delegates to the First Mennonite World Conference reported. Local reports from various communities followed. Considerable time was devoted to the constitution of the Conference, a proposed Bible school, the spiritual life of the congregations, work among the young people, proposed publications (songbooks and Unser Blatt), and mission work.

Highly interesting and informative are the brief reports given by the representatives from the settlements of Molotschna, Chortitza, Zagradovka, Memrik, etc. The proposed constitution was unanimously accepted. Various significant lectures were presented. The total number of Mennonites of the Ukraine given for 1926 was 46,829. ("Protokoll," Unser Blatt II, November 1926, 47-53.) C.K.

Altmann, a Dutch Mennonite family. Cornelis Sybrand Altmann, b. Feb. 21, 1881, at Rotterdam, who served six times as a deacon of the Rotterdam Mennonite congregation, should be mentioned as treasurer of the Hollandsch (q.v.) Doopsgezind Emigranten Bureau, who in 1924 ff. was very active in helping Mennonite refugees from Russia go to Brazil, and promoting the young colonies in this country by financial support. vdZ.

Altonasche Liederen: see Gezangen, Christelijke.

Alyt Claesdochter, an Anabaptist martyr, arrested when the Oldeklooster (q.v.) was recaptured, drowned at Leeuwarden in Friesland on April 14, 1535. (Vos, Menno Simons, 228.) vdZ.

Amazon Valley Indian Mission was established in 1955 at Araguacema, Goias, under an independent Mennonite (MC) board with the same name, whose founder and field director was Howard Hammer (d.1957). In 1958 the work was taken over by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, although the AVIM board has continued to support the work. Since 1955 the Amazon Valley Indian Mission Newsletter has been published quarterly. H.S.B.

American Brethren Mission Union: see Board of Foreign Missions of the Mennonite Brethren Church.

Amish Mennonite Aid, founded Nov. 10, 1955, is the relief and mission agency of the Beachy Amish Mennonite group. Its work is carried on by an executive committee of three officers: Norman D. Beachy president, Elam L. Kauffman vice-president, and Jacob J. Hershberger secretary-treasurer. It is "dedicated to the rendering of material, moral, and spiritual aid, in the name of Christ, to destitute and needy people." Its only project thus far has been a refugee service center in Berlin, Germany, on behalf of refugees from the East Zone, since 1958 centered in Friedensheim, erected by it in 1958 at Klüberstrasse 26-28, Berlin. In addition to clothing distribution the program includes recreational facilities for children, Bible study classes for young and old, and summer Bible school. A.M.A. also has as one of its purposes the stimulation of interest among the Beachy Amish and Old Order Amish in missions and relief. H.S.B.

Amish Mennonite Storm and Fire Aid Union, Wellesley, Ont., was established about a century ago and serves the Amish Mennonite community in Ontario. In 1953 it had approximately 1,100 members and covered over $13,000,000 worth of property against fire and storm damage. In that year it paid out $6,971.69. M.G.

Amulree Reformed Mennonite Church: see North-casthope Reformed.

Anabaptist Fund (Täufergut). In 1670 the cantonal Bern government issued a mandate against the Anabaptists which among other things ordered that the property of Anabaptists expelled from the canton should be confiscated and sold and the proceeds placed in a special fund. The purpose of the decree was to punish the Anabaptists by sending them out of the country completely stripped of all assets, and also to retain their assets in the canton. These assets were placed in the administration of the state church parishes from which the Anabaptists were expelled, and invested, so that the interest could be applied to church and school purposes. Later the funds were concentrated in the hands of the county authorities (Aemterweise) and invested in what was called the Täufergut funds, and still later a special account was set up in Bern called the Täufer-Urbar (q.v.). Anabaptist children returning to the state church could receive their inheritance from this fund, only however in case their parents had had a state church marriage (those of parents with only an Anabaptist marriage being declared illegitimate).

The income (and holdings ultimately) of the Anabaptist fund was used for various purposes. A large part remained until the modern civil structure of the canton was set up and then distributed to the civil authorities of the local units. By these it was usually applied to school and church purposes. Money was used for the repair of church buildings, purchase of pews, bells, and even new church buildings. For instance, in 1692 the parish of Schwarzenegg in the district of Thur received the value of some $4,000 to use on its new church building and for other purposes.

A similar procedure was followed in the canton of Zürich as well as in various places in South Germany, especially in Württemberg where much of the confiscated Anabaptist assets was used for similar purposes, but also for the benefit of the district treasury. H.S.B.

S. Geiser, Die Taufgesinnten Gemeinden (Karlsruhe, 1932) 406 f.; E. Teufel, "Die Beschlagnahme und Verwaltung des Täufergutes durch den Fiskus im Herzogtum Württemberg im 16. und 17. Jahrhundert," Theol. Ztschft VIII (1932) 296-304.

Andriesz, Johan: see Aken, J. H. van.

Angenehme Stunden was a 4-page Sunday-school magazine published monthly by the Mennonite Publishing Company, Elkhart, Ind., beginning April 1887. Appearing concurrently with Welcome Tidings (q.v.) and having the same format, it was not a translation, but carried completely different text. Occasionally cover pictures for a given issue of the two magazines were the same. Lists of Sunday-school materials appearing in Herold der Wahrheit indicate that publication must have ceased between August 1892 and January 1893. N.P.S.

Anna Jaclechter, an Anabaptist martyr, arrested when the Oldeklooster (q.v.) was taken, was drowned at Leeuwarden, Friesland, on April 14, 1535. (Vos, Menno Simons, 229.) vdZ.

Anne Jansdochter, of Tzum, and Anne Luythiedochter, Anabaptist martyrs, drowned on April 14, 1535, at Leeuwarden, Friesland, after they had been arrested on April 7, when the Oldeklooster (q.v.) was recaptured. (Vos, Menno Simons, 228.) vdZ.

Anne de Vlaster: see Anneken Hendriks. She was the wife of Lambert Jansz Smid and in 1571 was living in Franeker, Friesland.

Anske Lieuwe Hayedochter, an Anabaptist martyr, drowned at Leeuwarden, Friesland, on April 14, 1535, after she had been arrested at the recapture of the Oldeklooster (q.v.). (Vos, Menno Simons, 228.)
vdZ.

Antrim County (Mich.) Mennonite settlement, now extinct, was begun in 1880 at Mancelona. It was first listed in the 1896 Mennonite Meeting Calendar. Meetings were held every two weeks simultaneously in the Cheatonia and the Wetzell schools, and every two weeks alternately in the Baer and Garber homes. June 15, 1895, the Herald of Truth reported communion services at Wetzell's, "where a large congregation was present." The 1899 Calendar no longer listed services for Antrim County. (See also Mancelona.)
M.G.

Appelman, Cornelis: see Cornelis Jan Oliviers.

Arcade Mennonite Church, Arcade, N.Y., a member of the Ontario Mennonite Conference, had 19 members in 1958, with Leroy Yoder as minister. The church was organized in 1956. In 1958 it purchased a schoolhouse in Yorkshire as a meetinghouse.
M.G.

Arends, a Dutch Mennonite family, at Drachten, Friesland, since the 17th century. Arend Tjeers was a preacher of the Drachten congregation 1772-89, as were his sons Sybolt Arends 1780 (?) - 1808 and Tjalling Arends 1789-1805. Some members of this family adopted the family name of Arends and others Frieswijk.
vdZ.

Arentsz, Engel: see Dooregeest, E. A. van.

Argentine Chaco Mennonite Mission, South America. In 1958 there were five missionaries with 16 congregations and over 800 adult baptized members and 550 as yet unbaptized adults. The leadership of the congregations is wholly in the hands of the national pastors. Headquarters of the mission were at Saenz Pena, Chaco Province.
H.S.B.

Argentine Mennonite Church (MC), located at 37th and Metropolitan Ave., in Kansas City, Kans., was established in 1946 out of the former Mennonite Gospel Mission (q.v.). In 1958 the membership was 74, with Rufus P. Horst and Glen Yoder as ministers. It is a member of the South Central Conference.
H.S.B.

Aris-Jansz-volk: see Verwer, A. J.

Arkenbout, a former Mennonite family. Martinus Arkenbout was a preacher of the Flemish congregation at Brielle c1689. His son Jan Arkenbout served as preacher at Schiedam 1716-22 and Haarlem (Klein Heiligland congregation) 1722-c40, and his grandson Martinus Arkenbout, educated at the Amsterdam Lamist seminary, served at Zwolle 1741-46, Leiden 1746-57, and Haarlem 1757-d.90. In 1782 he dedicated the Mennonite home for the poor on Groot Heiligland, and his sermon De Zang- en Speelkonst in haar nuttig gebruik . . . , preached on July 26, 1771, when the Klein Heiligland Mennonite church acquired its organ, was published at Haarlem in 1771. In the Amsterdam Zonist congregation there were also some Arkenbouts.
vdZ.

Arys Gerritsz, of Limmen, an Anabaptist martyr, was beheaded at The Hague, Holland, on July 28, 1534. He was arrested at Bergklooster (q.v.), being among the Anabaptists who had sailed from Amsterdam on their way to Münster (q.v.). Arys Gerritsz was the son of Aeffgen (q.v.) Lystyncx. (Mellink, Wederdopers, 170, 343.)
vdZ.

Ashland County (Ohio) Old Order Amish settlement consisted in 1958 of one congregation located near the city of Ashland, with 65 members and two bishops, Abe D. Troyer and Emanuel E. Schrock.
H.S.B.

Assiniboine Mennonite Mission Camp (GCM), located 15 miles west of Winnipeg near Springstein, Man., was founded in 1949 and owned by a private corporation until it was turned over to the G.C.M. Conference in 1957.
F.C.P.

Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries. Beginning with the academic year 1958-59 the Mennonite Biblical Seminary of Elkhart, Ind., and the Goshen College Biblical Seminary of Goshen, Ind., entered a co-operative relationship known under the descriptive name, The Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries. By action of the boards of control of the two seminaries, following a Memorandum of Agreement defining and regulating the relationship, a plan of academic co-operation has been set up which provides certain substantial advantages for both schools, while retaining the academic, organizational, and financial independence of each. Provision is made for later adherence of other Mennonite bodies to the Association, and it is hoped that the Association may ultimately become a general center of ministerial and missionary training for the Mennonite brotherhood of North America. The headquarters of the Association are on the Elkhart campus. An Institute for Mennonite Studies, also located on the same campus, has been established as a conjoint operation of the Associated Seminaries.

The following joint committees direct and serve the co-operative program: (a) the Joint Co-ordinating Committee representing the boards of control, functioning for the general supervision of the co-operation; (b) the Joint Administrative Committee representing the seminaries, composed of the president and dean of each associated seminary, and one representative of each affiliated seminary, to be administratively responsible for the day-to-day functioning of the co-operative program; (c) the Joint Library Committee, responsible for the co-ordination of the library program by which the libraries of the two schools function as an operating unit.

In addition to the regular offerings by each seminary of its own required and elective courses, the Associated Seminaries provide a program of joint-course offerings, to be normally given on the Elkhart campus, sufficient to make it possible for a student to take one fourth to one third of his curriculum choices in the conjoint program. In addition, cross-registration by students in the regular offerings of all associated seminaries is permitted by consent of the deans involved.
H.S.B.

Association of Mennonite Aid Societies of the United States and Canada: see Mennonite Aid Societies, Association of.

Association of Mennonite Hospitals and Homes: see Mennonite Hospitals and Homes, Association of.

Association of Mennonite University Students, a Canadian student organization, was begun in 1951 at the University of Manitoba in Winnipeg. It has since spread to the University of Toronto, and the universities of Saskatchewan (Saskatoon), Alberta (Edmonton), and British Columbia (Vancouver). Activities include usually monthly meetings and an annual banquet, with occasional study conferences, workshops, and special studies. The Manitoba chapter also operates a placement service. A major purpose of the organization is to increase student understanding of and appreciation for the Mennonite heritage and the Mennonite church and its work. A total of over 200 students belong to the several chapters. H.S.B.

Reinhard Vogt, "The Association of Mennonite University Students," Menn. Life XII (1957) 39 f.

Atglen (Pa.) Open Air Singing, an annual affair held in Kennel's Woods adjacent to the Maple Grove Mennonite Church (q.v.), ½ mile north of Atglen, was started in 1933 by Joseph G. Kennel (d. 1949). It meets annually the last Sunday afternoon of July. The program consists of the singing of hymns interspersed with short talks by visiting speakers, and in recent years with special singing by quartets and trios. Maximum attendance was in 1950, with 7,580 persons from 10 states and Ontario. In 1958 the attendance was 3,280. The annual offerings for relief or missions have averaged $1,300 for the last ten years. The organization consists of a chairman (Earl J. Kennel) and a secretary (Vernon Kennel). V.K.

Atse Wytseys: see Zijpp, van der.

Atte Nanne Sybrandtsdochter, an Anabaptist martyr, drowned at Leeuwarden, Friesland, April 14, 1535. She was arrested when the Oldeklooster (q.v.) was recaptured. (Vos, Menno Simons, 228.) vdZ.

Attema, a Dutch Mennonite family, originally from Leeuwarden, Friesland. E. Attema (d. 1888), a lawyer at Leeuwarden, was a trustee of the A.D.S. and a curator of its seminary. Jurjen Attema, of Leeuwarden, was preacher of the Nijmegen congregation 1861-81 and also a trustee of the A.D.S. Doede Attema (Leeuwarden, Oct. 2, 1880-Hilversum, Nov. 18, 1954) was pastor of Zijldijk 1907-9, Twisk-Abbekekerk 1909-12, IJmuiden 1912-15, and Zaandam-West 1915-46. After retiring he still served as assistant pastor at Oudebildtzijsl 1947-49. Doede Attema, who was also for many years a trustee of the A.D.S., was one of the first pastors to promote the Mennonite Youth Movement. For many years he was an advisory member of the board of the Doopsgezinde (q.v.) Jongerenbond. He was also secretary of the Zaanse (q.v.) Fonds. vdZ.

Atwater M.B. Church: see Winton M.B. Church.

Aucke Sieurdsdochter, an Anabaptist martyr, drowned at Leeuwarden, Friesland, on April 14, 1535, having been arrested at the recapture of the Oldeklooster (q.v.). (Vos, Menno Simons, 228.) vdZ.

Augsburger Mennonite Church (MC), at Berne, Ind., was formed in 1869, when the families of Preacher Christian Augsburger (1821-1903), George Fox, John Stauffer, and Peter Steiner withdrew from the Berne Mennonite Church (GCM). In the Herald of Truth for June 1871 services are listed for the Augsburger Church every three weeks. On April 29 and 30, 1871, John F. Funk (q.v.) and Daniel Brenneman visited the Augsburger congregation. Services were conducted in the P. C. Steiner and Christian Augsburger homes, and in a school. On June 11, 1871, Bishop John M. Brenneman of Elida, Ohio, received Augsburger and his group of 11 charter members into the fellowship of the Mennonite Church (MC). Augsburger's death in 1903 marked the end of regular services in the congregation. But as late as 1955 one of Augsburger's daughters was still living, a woman of 82, who still considered herself a member of the M.C. group. J.C.W.

Ayte: see Eyte.

Aytta: see Viglius.

Bächlingen: see Vogelstock.

Baedeker, Friedrich Wilhelm (1823-1906), noted evangelist among the Russians in the early days of the Baptist and Evangelical Christian movement in Russia, who devoted much time to preaching in the Russian prisons, and three times crossed Siberia as far as the island of Sakhalin, was of German origin but lived most of his life in England except when on evangelistic tours. He was a close friend of George Müller of Bristol and Lord Radstock (G. A. W. Waldgrave, 1833-1913), and was originally a member of the Plymouth Brethren (Open Brethren) but later worked as an independent. He worked with Radstock in the first St. Petersburg revival in 1874-76. Both men worked among the nobility at first, using the "drawing-room mission" technique. H.S.B.

Baer, John (1797-1858), an early publisher of Mennonite writings, was born in Upper Leacock, Pa., Jan. 31, 1797, a son of Andrew Baer (d. 1805) and great-grandson of John Henry Baer, the Swiss Mennonite pioneer settler (1727). He grew up in Lancaster. In 1821 he was sole owner of Der Volksfreund and in 1834 he also purchased the Lancaster Beobachter. These he merged as the Lancaster Volksfreund und Beobachter, the only German newspaper in the city. This was continued by his sons. In 1819 he published the first large folio Bible published in America. In 1828 he continued the Agricultural Almanac started by William Albright and in 1833 started also the German Pennsylvania Almanac, continuing both for years. Later it became Baer's Almanac, the 135th issue of which (1960) is soon to be released by Lester Lestz. For years he published many items for the Mennonites, succeeding Ehrenfried (q.v.). Reuben A. and Christian R. Baer continued the firm as John Baer's Sons; grandsons John F. and Charles S. Baer continued the firm until recently. I.D.L.

Evans and Ellis, History of Lancaster County, 500, 501; Biographical Annals of Lancaster County, 152, 153; and Klein's History of Lancaster County IV, 408.

Bage (Brazil) Mennonite Brethren Church, located at Bage in the state of Rio Grande do Sul, was organized in 1943 when the Bage settlement was established by settlers from the earlier Krauel colony in the state of Santa Catharina. The meetinghouse was built in 1953. In 1957 the membership was 280, with Wilhelm Janzen as leader. M.A.K.

Bair's Hanover Mennonite Church (MC): see Bair Mennonite Meetinghouse.

Bakels, Pieter Simon (Deventer, 1844-Haarlem, 1921), educated at the Amsterdam Mennonite seminary, was a pastor at Hoorn on the island of Texel 1869-76, Burg on Texel 1876-89, and Koog-Zaandijk 1889-1907, in which year he retired. He was a trustee of the A.D.S. 1889-1908. Herman Bakels (q.v.) was his son. Another son was Reinier Sybrand Bakels (b. den Hoorn, 1873), a well-known painter of portraits and landscapes. vdZ.

Bakker, a common Dutch family name, meaning Baker. A well-known Mennonite Bakker family, many of whose members served as preachers, stems from the island of Ameland (q.v.), where Sybrand Jans Bakker was an (untrained) minister of the Waterlander congregation 1718-d.61. His great-grandson Jacob Sybrandsz Bakker (Terschelling, 1802-63) was pastor of Woudsend 1828-30 and Terschelling 1830-63. Three of his sons went into the ministry: Rienk Jacob Bakker (1827-61) serving at Warga 1853-57 and Aalsmeer on the Zijdweg 1857-d.61; Jan Popko Bakker (1843-1911) serving at Zuid-Zijpe 1868-73, Midwolda 1873-75, Middelstum 1875-77, Giethoorn-Zuid 1877-81, and Twisk-Abbeke 1881-1908; Cornelis Bakker (1842-99) serving at Wolvega 1866-71, Gorredijk-Lippenhuizen 1871-79, and Franeker 1879-d.99. Pastor Gerrit Bakker (q.v.) did not belong to this family. His son Claas Bakker served at Leermens-Loppersum 1836-d.84. Henricus Bakker was 1723-d.56 a preacher of the Amsterdam Zonist church, Hendrik Jacobs Bakker (1752-1848) served at Rasquert 1792-96, Veendam-Wildervank 1796-1804, Heerenveen 1804-9, and Middelie-Azwijk 1809-38. A Jan Michiels Bakker, d. 1849, was a preacher at Oude Niedorp 1813-31 and at Den Ilp 1831-49. (DB 1864, 179 f.; 1889, 17, 22-25.) vdZ.

Ballinx (Balling, Bailings, Ballingsz), Cornelis, a weaver at Rotterdam, Holland, at first a member of the Waterlander Mennonites, then a member and elder of the High German Mennonites, finally joining the Flemish church of Rotterdam, where he was an elder 1639-44. In 1644 he moved to Haarlem, where he also was an elder, at least until 1648. He was a very quarrelsome man, who was opposed by leaders like Eduard Nabels (q.v.) and Hans de Ries.

During his High German period he was an influential man; he was the first after Jan Cents to sign the Jan Cents confession of 1630. vdZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. II; 2203 f.; II, 2, 359-67, 428; K. Vos, Geschiedenis der Doopsgez. Gemeente te Rotterdam (repr. 1907) 4, 13, 42; DB 1907, 169.

Balling, Pieter, a member of the Flemish Mennonite congregation of Amsterdam and an adherent of Galenus (q.v.) Abrahamsz. He published Het Licht op den Kandelaar (Amsterdam, 1662), Verdediging van de Regering der Doopsgezinde Gemeente . . . (Amsterdam, 1663), and Nadere Verdediging van de Regering der Doopsgezinde Gemeente (Amsterdam, 1664), in which he defended Galenus and attacked his opponents. Balling was also a good friend of the Jewish philosopher Baruch de Spinoza. vdZ.

K. O. Meinsma, Spinoza en zijn kring (The Hague, 1896) passim.

Ballot, Johannes Stephanus Simeon, a Dutch Mennonite minister serving at Wolvega 1863-67 and Pieterzijl 1867-d.79, published the paper "Hans de Ries, zijn leven en werken" in DB 1863 and 1864. His brother Anthony Ballot served as pastor at Westzaan-Zuid 1860-64 and Hengelo 1864-d.71. vdZ.

Balthasar Grasbanntner (Tischler) was a Moravian Anabaptist leader who belonged to the Marpeck Brotherhood, and being a joiner or cabinetmaker by trade is generally called Balthasar der Tischler. He probably served as elder of the church at Eibenschitz, for a Moravian chronicler calls him the Anabaptist "Vorsteher." He was a signatory of the important document in the Kunstbuch (q.v.) which constitutes a reply to Marpeck and expresses appreciation for Marpeck's work among the Moravian churches, signed by five men representing seven churches, and dated Sunday, Oct. 7, 1553.

Jarrold Zeman, in his research on the Moravian Brethren and their relation to the Anabaptists, has found that Balthasar Grasbanntner is identical with Balthasar der Tischler who represented the Anabaptists in their second discussion with the Moravian Brethren regarding their differences. The meeting took place at the request of the Anabaptists on April 17, 1559, at Eibenschitz, moving to Znaim the next day. Zeman has shown the importance of this encounter and the relationship between these two groups. In the meeting at Eibenschitz the points presented by the Moravian Brethren were: (1) reception of church members; (2) church discipline and the three steps prescribed by Christ; (3) the Moravian Brethren basis for infant baptism; (4) relation to government and participation in the magistracy. Of the four points the third received most extensive and heated discussion. Then the Anabaptists replied to a few questions: (1) What procedure do you observe in obtaining elders? (2) How many Anabaptist sects are there? (3) How many Anabaptists are there? (4) Where and when did your group originate? Finally Balthasar was asked if he had ever belonged to any other group of Anabaptists, to which he replied that he had not. The reporter comments that after all this talk they departed as they had come; "And so we had worked three whole hours and caught nothing just as those [the disciples] worked a whole night without catching anything."

The background of this discussion is sketched in the article Hans Uhrmacher (Supplement) and is on the whole reliably (according to Zeman) given by Müller. Balthasar's desire to communicate with the Moravian Brethren is evidence that the Marpeck Brotherhood existed as a separate body in Moravia as late as 1559, and sought to foster the unity of the church there. The Moravian Brethren had moved so far away from the Anabaptist position on baptism that union with them was out of the question. Furthermore, the Anabaptists did not have the academic equipment (knowledge of church history and exegesis) to counter the arguments of their more learned opponents. Their attempt to compensate by quoting from Erasmus' Annotations irritated the Moravian Brethren. Nevertheless Balthasar's desire and initiative in conversing with the Moravian Brethren stands out clearly. Of all the known contacts with the Brethren this seems to have been the most extensive and significant. The date and manner of Balthasar's death are unknown. W.K.L.

J. Th. Müller, "Die Berührungen der alten und neuen Brüderunität mit den Täufern," Ztscht für Brüdergeschichte IV (1910) 197-207; Heinold Fast, "Pilgram Marbeck und das oberdeutsche Täuferum," ARG XLVII (1956) 233.

Bancroft Mennonite Church (MC), located at 5559 West Bancroft St., Toledo, Ohio, a member of the Ohio and Eastern Conference, began in 1945 as a mission conducted by the Fulton County and Williams County Mennonite congregations. The meetinghouse was dedicated on Dec. 15, 1946. Freeman Aschliman, ordained in 1949, is in charge of this congregation of 38 members. F.W.A.

Baptism (I, 224-28): Supplement. In the Mennonite Church (MC) and among some of the Amish Mennonites the custom of baptizing by pouring "in the stream," i.e., in a creek or river, arose during the 19th century, and at times has been widely practiced. It is still optional, and is practiced in a number of congregations. The reasons for the introduction of this practice are obscure. Some prefer "living water," i.e., running water; others seek to follow the example of Christ who was baptized in the Jordan River. Baptism "in water with water," as it is sometimes called, has nothing to do with immersion. H.S.B.

Barbara Diricks, of Wier, and Barbara Tiardsdochter, of Sexbierum, Anabaptist martyrs, were arrested on April 7, 1535, during the recapture of the Oldeklooster (q.v.) and drowned at Leeuwarden, Friesland, on April 14. (Vos, Menno Simons, 229.) vDZ.

Barbeli, of Sumiswald, living at Studen near Biel, Switzerland, an Anabaptist martyr, was drowned at Bern in late 1537 or early 1538. vDZ.

D. L. Gratz, Bernese Anabaptists (Scottsdale, 1953) 22, No. 17.

Barrville Mennonite Church (MC), a member of the Allegheny Conference, located five miles north of Belleville, Pa., started in 1936 as a mission outpost of the Maple Grove Mennonite Church, was organized in 1956 as a separate congregation. In 1958 it had 35 members, with Elam H. Glick as pastor. A church was purchased in 1953. H.S.B.

Bart Conservative Mennonite Church, 1½ miles east of Georgetown, Lancaster Co., Pa., was organized in 1950 and its church completed in 1956. It had 49 members in 1959. The ministers were Shem Peachey, M. S. Stoltzfus, and Urbane Peachey. M.G.

Baucke (Jancke?) Jorisdochter, an Anabaptist martyr, drowned at Leeuwarden, Friesland, on April 14, 1535, after she had been arrested at the recapture of the Oldeklooster (q.v.). (Vos, Menno Simons, 228.) vDZ.

Baudynken Het, an Anabaptist martyr: see Dingentgen (van Hondschooten).

Bavink, a widely ramified Mennonite family, originally living in the district of Twente, Dutch province of Overijssel, later also found at Groningen and Kampen, and in East Friesland, Germany. Some of its members served the church as ministers, e.g., Hendrik Bavink, a merchant and lay preacher in the Waterlander congregation of Kampen in the early 18th century; Pieter Bavink, an untrained preacher of the United Waterlander and Flemish congregation at Groningen 1728-?; Coenraad Bavink, trained at Groningen University and by Pastor P. Beets of Zaandam, served at Groningen as an assistant pastor from 1794, was pastor at Emden 1795-1807 and at Nijmegen 1807-10; Hendrik Bavink served at Norden 1781-84, Veendam 1784-86, and Noordbroek 1786-89; Lodewijk Gerrit Bavink, of Blokzijl, educated at the Amsterdam seminary, was pastor at Wormer-Jisp 1834-36 and Purmerend 1836-73. Many Bavinks served as deacons, particularly at Almelo, Kampen, Emden, and Leer. A side branch of the Bavink family is the Bavink ten Cate family of Almelo. vDZ.

Beachy Amish Mission Board: see Amish Mennonite Aid.

Beacon Bible Camp, Frazer, Mont., established in 1947, is jointly sponsored by the seven Mennonite congregations of Lustre, Wolf Point, and Larslan, Mont. (3 GCM, 3 MB, and 1 EMB), and governed by a camp board appointed by representatives of these churches. The camp is located some 20 miles south of the Lustre community, 5 miles northeast of Frazer. H.S.B.

Bechterdissen, a Mennonite settlement near Bielefeld, Germany, built by Pax boys, dedicated Oct. 6, 1956. The Mennonites of this settlement form the Mennonite congregation of Bechterdissen, of which Pastor G. Hildebrandt, of Göttingen, is the pastor. (Der Mennonit IX, 1956, No. 12, 189 f.) vDZ.

Beckenknecht, Hans: see Beck, Hans, II.

Beckerath, Wolf von (1896-1944), a noted German artist, born at Crefeld, Germany, studied art, history, and philosophy and attended the Crefeld School for Decorative Art (1921-23). He has been called a representative "Rhenish Painter." Mathias T. Engels calls him an artist "in the true sense of a high tradition . . . of great spiritual tension . . . specifically Rhenish by his express humanity . . . breath and immediacy of life." During World War II Wolf von Beckerath did a series of paintings which are considered his most important work: "Large and complete pictorial creations, mainly of a religious character. Some of these . . . will no doubt one day rank among the best of modern paintings." Engels also gives reproductions of Wolf von Beckerath's "Shepherds' Adoration" and "Wedding of Canaan." He died a victim of a bombing of Crefeld. E.H.C.

M. T. Engels, Documents, Revue Mensuelle des Questions Allemandes: German Contemporary Art, special issue published by the Gesellschaft für übernationale Zusammenarbeit (Offenburg, Germany, 1952) 84-87.

Bedenken (I, 261): Supplement. According to a report by Philipp Kieferndorf in Menn. Bl. XL (1893) 108 f., 114 f., 121 f., a copy of the Prozess was secured for the Paulus Museum in Worms a.Rh. The full text of the Prozess is printed in the report, which is entitled "Eine Streitschrift evangelischer Theologen gegen die 'Wiedertäufer' aus dem 16. Jahrhundert." H.S.B.

Bedminster Township: see Bucks County.

Beechy Mennonite Brethren Church: see Friedensheim.

Beek (Beeck), van, a widely ramified Dutch Mennonite family, found from the early 17th century at Amsterdam and Haarlem, and also at Utrecht. Most of them were well-to-do merchants. In Amsterdam some belonged to the Lamist (q.v.) church, and some to the Zonists. Dirk van Beek, d. Oct. 21, 1762, of Amsterdam, was a Mennonite minister at Schiedam 1722-26 and Rotterdam 1726-53, in which year he retired. As secretary of the Rotterdam church board he was active in supporting the Mennonites who emigrated from the Palatinate, Germany, to America via Rotterdam. vöZ.

Beerdigungs-Verein zu Leamington (Ont.) was established in 1935 at Leamington and serves Mennonites in the area, covering funeral expenses now averaging $200 per death. From 1935 through 1955 it had paid out $9,129. In 1958 it paid out $1800, covering nine deaths. M.G.

Bel, a Dutch Mennonite family, formerly living at Amsterdam. Pieter Bel, a merchant at Hoorn and precentor of the Mennonite congregation in his home town, was an ardent Patriot (q.v.), who had to flee from the country in 1787 or 1788 with the Mennonite deacon Pieter Houttuyn of Hoorn because of their political activity. They lived at Brussels, Belgium, until about 1795, when they returned. (Inv. Arch. Amst. II, 2, No. 178.) vöZ.

Beldor Mennonite Church (MC), located 4 miles south of Swift Run in Stonewall District, Rockingham Co., Va., was started in 1935 in a former United Brethren Church found vacant by the Y.P.C.A.

of the Eastern Mennonite College. It was purchased by the Mennonites in 1947. In 1958 it had 18 members, with Paul Good as pastor. H.A.B.

Belgium Mennonite Mission (MC) was founded in 1950 by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities. In 1958 there was one missionary couple at work, with two congregations (Brussels and Bourgeois-Rixensart), three outposts, and a total of 24 members. The congregations belong to the Conference of Evangelical Churches of French-Speaking Countries. Mission headquarters are at Ohain (q.v.). H.S.B.

Belleville Mennonite School (MC), until 1952 called K.(ishacoquillas) V.(alley) Christian Day School, located near Belleville, Pa., was founded in 1945 as an elementary school by a group of Mennonites and Amish Mennonites from several congregations in the K.V. who organized a patrons' association which set up a board of directors now called Belleville Mennonite School Board. In 1952 the high-school department was added and in 1958-59 the enrollment was 154 in the elementary school and 83 in the high school. The school was held at Menno (White Hall) the first year, with J. B. Kanagy as teacher, with 28 pupils. In 1946-47 a three-room building was constructed, the next year the high-school building was begun, and in 1958-59 a two-room elementary building was erected. Principals have been: Rhoda Peachey 1946-47, Lester Zook 1947-48, Alpie Zook 1948-56, Laurie Mitton 1956-59, Arthur Byer superintendent 1959-. H.S.B.

Bellwood Mennonite Church (MC), Milford, Neb., was organized in November 1957 by approximately 13 families of the Milford Mennonite community. The new building, begun in 1958, was dedicated in March 1959. The 1959 membership was 70, with Ivan R. Lind serving as pastor. M.G.

Ben Israels: see Ringh, Yemede; also Jacobsz, Anthony.

Benodiging: see Communion Call.

Berne Mennonite (MC) Church: see Augsburg.

Bethany Bible School, Deverakonda, Andhra Pradesh, India, in the Telugu Mission field of the M.B. Church, was established in 1920 for the training of indigenous workers and has trained nearly all of the 300 ministers, evangelists, teachers, Bible women, and other Christian workers in this field. First located in Nagar-Kurnool, it was transferred to Shamshabad in 1930, and in 1946 to Deverakonda. H.S.B.

Bethany Christian High School (MC), founded in 1954, is owned and operated by a board of directors appointed by the Indiana-Michigan Mennonite Conference. On a campus of 12 acres located one mile south of Goshen College on Highway 15, it has a new building containing classrooms, library, chapel, and gymnasium, and a remodeled building with classrooms and cafeteria. John S. Steiner has been principal from the beginning. In 1958-59 the enrollment was 235, with a faculty of 12 teachers.

H.S.B.

Bethany Church of God in Christ Mennonite Church, Rich Hill, Mo.: see Emmanuel Church.

Bethany Mennonite Brethren Church, Fresno, Cal.: see Fresno Mennonite Brethren Church.

Bethany Mennonite Church (MC), Pulguillas, Coamo, Puerto Rico, founded in 1946, had 111 members in 1958. The first meetinghouse, a tabernacle type church, built in 1946, was replaced in 1949. Paul Lauver was the first pastor, followed by Lester Hershey who was still the pastor in 1959. This was the first Mennonite congregation in Puerto Rico.

H.S.B.

Gladys Widmer, We Enter Puerto Rico (Elkhart, 1952).

Bethany Mennonite Home, at 1910 W. Diamond St., Philadelphia, Pa., was established in 1954 as a Mennonite (MC) home for the aged. In 1958 it had 11 guests.

H.S.B.

Bethel Bible Institute (GCM), Abbotsford, B.C., was begun in 1939 by Nick Bahnman in the Coghlan (B.C.) Mennonite Church (GCM), and moved in 1943 to its present site next to the West Abbotsford G.C.M. Church. In 1947 the present academic building was erected, preceded by a girls' dormitory and followed in 1951 by a boys' dormitory. The peak enrollment was 65 in 1952-53; in 1958-59 it was 36. The Institute is an agency of the Conference of United Mennonite Churches of British Columbia (GCM) and is owned and operated by a board of directors consisting of one or two members from each congregation in the province. Since 1954-55 the principal has been Edward Enns, with a staff of one to three additional teachers. The school term is six months in length. Some 400 students have attended the Institute.

H.S.B.

Bethel Community Mennonite Church (GCM) is located at 9851 Orr and Day Road, Santa Fe Springs, near Whittier, Cal. The congregation was organized in 1956 and its church built in 1959. The membership was 48 in 1959, with Lyman Hofstetter as pastor.

M.G.

Bethel Conservative Mennonite Church, Blountstown, Fla., was first listed in the Mennonite Yearbook of 1955 as the Red Oak congregation, with 33 members. In 1958 the Yearbook lists it as Bethel. Raymond Byler has been the pastor of the congregation from its beginning. The membership in 1958 was 54.

M.G.

Bethel Conservative Mennonite Church, located 2 miles north and 2½ miles east of Nappanee, Ind., was organized in 1955 and its church built in 1954-55. The 1959 membership was 85, with Homer D. Miller its bishop and Jacob E. Miller its minister.

M.G.

Bethel Conservative Mennonite Church, not under conference, located at Millbank, Ont., was organized in 1957 as a schism from the Riverdale Amish Mennonite Church (q.v.), in which the bishop, Valentine Nafziger, took a more conservative position on nonconformity in attire and withdrew with a like-minded group. The membership in 1958 was 69, with Nafziger as bishop and Kenneth Brenneman as minister. The Bethel group built its own meetinghouse in 1958.

O.G.

Bethel Conservative Mennonite Church (MC) is located 2 miles north of Gladys, Va., and 18 miles south of Lynchburg, Va. The first families moved into the community in 1944, and C. L. Ressler was the minister for the first seven years. The meetinghouse was built in 1953. In 1959 the membership was 22, with Milton A. Hostedler as pastor. H.S.B.

Bethel Deaconess Hospital, Mountain Lake, Minn.: see Mountain Lake Hospital.

Bethel Deaconess Hospital School of Nursing is an integral part of the Bethel Deaconess Hospital (q.v.). The charter of the Bethel Deaconess Home and Hospital Society of Newton, Kan., issued in 1903, stated: "... the purposes for which this corporation is formed are as follows: (a) the establishment and maintaining of a training school to educate and train nurses and deaconesses in a hospital to be erected for that purpose in connection with said school."

The Bethel Deaconess Hospital, with its School of Nursing, was dedicated and opened for service June 11, 1908. Sister Frieda Kaufman served as Superintendent and Deaconess Mother. Sister Catherine Voth was director and instructor of student nurses. The first student to enroll was Anna Janz on Sept. 26, 1908. By 1959 approximately 410 students had graduated and are serving as missionaries, ministers' wives, nurses, and homemakers. The alumnae association was organized in 1920. At present the capacity is 60 students in a regular three-year course.

The School of Nursing is accredited and approved by the Board of Nurse Registration and Nursing Education in the State of Kansas.

L.M.S.

Bethel Mennonite Church (GCM), Aldergrove, B.C., was organized in 1937. Its first meetinghouse, built in 1937, was replaced by a new one built in 1957, located at 24712 56th Avenue, some 33 miles east of Vancouver. In 1959 the membership was 262, with N. N. Friesen as pastor.

H.S.B.

Beth-El Mennonite Church (MC), Colorado Springs, Col., was organized in October 1957 and in 1959 had 43 members with Paul Wittrig as pastor. The congregation is temporarily meeting at the Knob-Hill Community Center; plans are in progress for a new meetinghouse.

M.G.

Bethel Mennonite Church (GCM), Dresden, N.D., is located 9 miles west and 1 mile south of Langdon. It was established in 1897 by Elder John D. Bartel. The meetinghouse was erected in 1897. In 1958 it had 49 members, with Clifford E. Koehn as pastor.

M.G.

Bethel Mennonite Church (MC), Albuquerque, N. Mex., located at 504 El Paraiso St., N.E., was established in 1950. Joe H. Yoder was the pastor of its 20 members in 1959.

M.G.

Bethel Mennonite Church (MC), Apple Creek, Ohio, an unaffiliated congregation, had 49 members in 1958. Lester D. Amstutz was the bishop and Earl J. Amstutz the minister. It was organized in 1955, by members formerly belonging to the Sonnenberg Mennonite Church. Since Jan. 1, 1956, services have been held in the basement of the uncompleted church. M.G.

Bethel Mennonite Church (GCM), Enid, Okla., at the corner of Nagel Avenue and South 4th Street, originated as a result of Mennonite families moving to Enid from Meno and Taloga, Okla., who originally met for worship in their homes. On March 7, 1938, they decided to organize the Bethel Mennonite Church and in 1940 they erected the present church building. In 1950 the group consisted of 24 members. Heinrich T. Neufeld was the pastor throughout the history of the church. In 1959 the congregation was discontinued and the members joined the Grace Mennonite Church (q.v.) of Enid. H.T.N.

Beth-Haven, 1500 Harrison Hill, Hannibal, Mo., a Mennonite (MC) nursing home, established in 1957 under a local board. In 1958 it had 18 guests. H.S.B.

Bethesda Mennonite Health Society, Yarrow, B.C., organized c1935, was serving approximately 850 families in the Lower Fraser Valley 20 years later. It covered medical and hospital expenses, paying out approximately $30,000 in 1953. M.G.

Bethlehem Mennonite Church (GCM), now extinct, Hooker, Okla., organized c1906, was closed c1915. Earlier it had 20 members, 23 in 1911, 7 in 1914. First and last ministers were Henry D. Schroeder and Henry Adrian. H.S.B.

Bible Fellowship Church is the new name chosen for their denomination by the Mennonite Brethren in Christ (q.v.) of Pennsylvania in their Seventy-fifth Annual Conference on April 11, 1959. The vote for the new name in the congregations was 1,580 for and 507 against the proposition, while in the conference 56 approved it and 6 opposed it. M.G.

Bierma, a Dutch Mennonite family, living in Friesland. Particularly in the former congregation of Vischbuurt (q.v.) and the present congregations of Holwerd, Ternaard, Hallum, and Oudebildtziil many members of this family served as deacons. voZ.

Biltius, Johannes: see Bilt, Johannes.

Blaauw, a widely ramified Mennonite family in the Netherlands, particularly found in the province of North Holland. Besides Gerrit Blaauw (q.v.), mention should be made of Hendrik J. Blaauw, preacher of the Old Flemish congregation at Norden 1775-76, Heerenveen-Knijpe 1776-82, and Middelie 1782-c1803, and Adriaan Blaauw Kzn (c1855-83), pastor at Wolvega 1881-82 and Wieringen 1882-d.83. A Mennonite Blaauw (Blauw, Blau, Blauw) family, mostly in business, is found at Amsterdam since the early 17th century. Cornelis Blaauw (Noordeinde van Graft, 1882-Amsterdam, 1957), an accountant at Amsterdam, was active as a deacon of the Amsterdam congregation, a trustee of the A.D.S., and in many of its activities. (DB 1895, 84-91, 99; DJ 1958, 20 f.; church records of Amsterdam.) voZ.

Black Mountain Mennonite Mission (MC), Ganado, Ariz., was established in 1953 as a mission among the Navaho Indians by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities. In 1958 it had 13 members, with Stanley Weaver as pastor. H.S.B.

Black Oak Bethel Mennonite Church (MC) is located in southern Fulton County, Pa., with the address of Route 1, Hancock, Md. It was organized in 1953 and is a member of the Ohio and Eastern Conference. In 1959 its membership was 53, with Michael M. Horst as its pastor. M.G.

Black River Mennonite Church (MC) is located 4½ miles south of Loman, Minn. The congregation was established in 1939 and was known as the Loman Mennonite Church until 1955. It became a fully organized church in 1953. It had 27 members in 1958, with William A. Kurtz as pastor. M.G.

Black Rock Retreat Association, Inc. (MC), an association of members of the Lancaster Mennonite Conference, was organized in 1954 to own and operate a Mennonite camp. A tract of 50 acres along the Octoraro Creek, 4½ miles southeast of Quarryville, Lancaster Co., Pa., was purchased in 1954, and the Black Rock Camp opened in 1956. H.S.B.

Blaine Mennonite Church (MC), located 7 miles east of Blaine, Ore., was organized in 1956 and in 1959 had 21 members. Jacob D. Kauffman was its pastor. M.G.

Bloemcamp: see Oldeklooster.

Bluesky Mennonite Church (MC), at Bluesky in northern Alberta, a member of the Alberta-Saskatchewan Conference, established in 1948, had 16 members in 1958, with Paul Burkholder as pastor. H.S.B.

Blumenau (Brazil) Mennonite Brethren Church was organized in 1952, the meetinghouse built in 1955. In 1957 the membership was 30, with Hans Kasdorf as leader. H.S.B.

Blumenau (Santa Catharina, Brazil) Mennonite Brethren Church was organized in 1923 by Elder Jacob Hübert of Witmarsum (Krauel Colony) and continued until 1949 as an affiliate. In that year on petition of the group it was officially accepted by Elder G. H. Rosenfeld of the Waldheim, Witmarsum, congregation as an independent M.B. congregation, connected with Waldheim, and with a membership of fourteen. When the Krauel M.B. group moved to Bage, the Blumenau M.B. congregation transferred its connection to the Curitiba M.B. Church. In 1955 the congregation had 21 members, with Wilhelm Koettker as leader. The congregation was then planning to build a meetinghouse. H.S.B.

W. Koettker, "Menn.-Brüder Gemeinde Blumenau, Brasilien," Menn. Rundschau LXXVIII (1955) 81.

Böhem (Behem), David, a minister in the Auspitz (q.v.) congregation in Moravia c1530, who was associated with Jörg Zaunring (q.v.), Burkhard von Ofen (q.v.), and Adam Schlegel (q.v.) in the leadership. He is called "Behemisch David" von der Schweintz (Schweinitz) in the Hutterite Chronicle. In 1531 he was excommunicated, as were Burkhard and Adam. Nothing further is known of him. (Zieglschmid, Chronik, 93 f., 99 f., 113, 118.)

H.S.B.

Bolivia. A Mennonite settlement of 37 families was established 1954-57 in the neighborhood of the city of Santa Cruz (pop. 143,600), in the fertile plain east of the Andes Mountains, by emigrants from the Paraguayan Chaco. Twelve families (now 10 families with 70 pop.) came partly (all 5 colonies were represented) from Fernheim Colony, the first six families arriving in 1954 and founding the colony Tres Palmas, 15 mi. n.e. of Santa Cruz. The second group of 25 families, who settled 3 miles beyond Tres Palmas, were conservative families from Menno Colony. The first group came primarily for economic reasons. Nikolai Kröker serves as minister for both groups, although the former adheres to the General Conference Church, and the latter to the Chortitz Church; neither group is organized. The Bolivian government has guaranteed to the Mennonites freedom of religion, exemption from military service, and the privilege of private schools. All such settlers are promised liberal credit from the government. The 1959 total population was 189.

H.S.B.

Bolt, Ulrich, a brother of the Anabaptist Eberli Bolt (q.v.), of Lachen in the Swiss canton of Schwyz, first a Catholic priest, then joined the Zwinglian Reformed party by 1524, was made pastor at Fläsch near Maienfeld in Chur, and in the course of 1525-26 apparently joined the Anabaptists. His first appearance in the records as an Anabaptist was in Basel in the spring of 1526, from which he was expelled and went to Grüningen and joined the Brethren there. Arrested by the magistrate of Grüningen, he must have recanted, since he was soon appointed pastor in the parish of Niederhasli in the canton of Zürich, where he remained at least until 1530, although he showed some sympathy for Anabaptism here also.

H.S.B.

Zwingliana I (Zürich, 1897 ff.) 141-43, 178-80; TA Zürich, 230, 231, 255.

Bonga, Lykele (Ternaard, Dec. 11, 1892-Leeuwarden, Oct. 16, 1952), at first a teacher, then studied theology at the university and Mennonite seminary at Amsterdam, and served as pastor at Dantumawoude 1921-26, Leiden 1926-34, and Leeuwarden 1934-52. He was also a poet; he wrote the hymn of the Friese (q.v.) Doopsgezinde Jongeren Bond and published a volume of poems, Als glas in lood (Leeuwarden, 1938). (DJ 1953, 11 f.)

vdZ.

Bontreger, Eli J. (1868-1958), a bishop of the Old Order Amish Mennonite Church, who lived in his latter years near Shipshewana, Ind. He was the third child of John E. (Hansi) and Barbara Mishler Bontreger, whose immigrant ancestor, Martin Born-träger of Switzerland, arrived at Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 5, 1767. Eli was born Jan. 19, 1868, near Shipshewana. He was married Dec. 18, 1890, to Mattie Miller, to whom were born five sons and three daughters. After her death in 1918, he was married on Dec. 5, 1920, to Amanda Miller. One son was born to them. Eli's first 27 years were spent near Shipshewana, the next 15 in North Dakota, and over 6 years in northern Wisconsin, before he again returned to Shipshewana. He was ordained minister May 13, 1894, at Shipshewana, and bishop near Mylo, N.D., June 18, 1901. In his 64-year ministry Bontreger baptized 437 persons, married 197 couples, preached over 2,600 times, ordained 36 ministers and deacons and 15 bishops, and traveled a total of over 520,000 miles by 1953.

Not only was he instrumental in the organization of the two colonies in North Dakota and Wisconsin, of which he was a part, but he was often asked to assist in the establishment of other colonies. His sincere desire to be impartial in all his dealings both in and out of the church won for him many lasting friendships.

As a writer Bontreger produced many articles for religious and secular papers. He became editor and cofounder of the present Herold der Wahrheit in 1912, and in 1923 he finished collecting and compiling material for the Bontreger History, which he had published the same year.

During both world wars he gave much valuable assistance to draftees both before and after induction. Also as a member of the Mennonite Central Committee (1942-52) he visited most of the Civilian Public Service camps in the United States as well as units at mental hospitals and men on detached service.

He died Feb. 15, 1958, at Sarasota, Fla., and was buried in the cemetery on his farm near Shipshewana, Ind. His mimeographed autobiography (up to 1955) is available in GCL.

M.E.B.

Boon, a Dutch Mennonite family of Sappemeer (q.v.) in the province of Groningen. Hendrick Coops Boon, landowner, farmer, and reclainer of peat-moors, as were nearly all his descendants, was also elder of the Danzig Flemish Mennonite congregation at Sappemeer from c1680. In 1747 his sister Jantje Coops Boon, married to the preacher Hendrik Wolters, provided that a large room on their farm should be forever at the disposal of the Danzig Old Flemish congregation for religious services. About 1760, however, the Boon family left the Danzig Mennonites to join the Groningen Old Flemish church. (Information by G. N. Schutter, Sappemeer.)

Boothamer, a former Dutch Mennonite family at Workum, Friesland, where Kempe Boothamer (c1700-72), an apothecary, was a deacon. His son Gerrit Boothamer (1725-90) was a pastor at Den Hoorn 1749-51 and Middelburg 1751-d.90. He wrote a history of the Middelburg congregation, which is preserved in manuscript. (DB 1873, 145; 1905, 6; Naamlijst 1790, 61.)

vdZ.

Bosch, formerly an outstanding Mennonite family at Amsterdam, of brokers, businessmen, bankers, later also physicians; some were deacons in the Lamist congregation. There was a Bosch family, possibly related to the Amsterdam Bosch family, in Alkmaar from the 17th century. Jan Bosch was elder of the Alkmaar Waterlander congregation 1699-1714 and at Haarlem 1714-? His son Gerrit Bosch served the Alkmaar congregation 1721-27. (DB 1891, 8; church records of Amsterdam and Alkmaar.) vDZ.

Bosland, a Dutch Mennonite family at Ouddorp. Since the early 17th century many of its members have served as deacons. Paulus Willemsz Bosland (d. 1703) was from 1672 a preacher and from 1686 an elder of the Ouddorp congregation. (DB 1907, 153, 155, 162, 165, 166.) vDZ.

Bouman, a former Mennonite family of Emden, East Friesland, Germany. Two of its members went into the ministry. Hermanus Lambertus Bouman (d. 1865) served 1819-24 at? 1824-34 at Makkum, and 1834-64 at Veenwoudsterwal. His son Heyke Uden Heykes Bouman (1828-78) was pastor of Den Ilp-Landsmeer 1853-54 and Noord-Zijpe 1854-78. Both had been educated at the Amsterdam Mennonite seminary. vDZ.

Bouqueirao (Brazil) Mennonite Brethren Church was organized in 1936 at the beginning of the Mennonite settlement made in the Bouqueirao area near the city of Curitiba by settlers moving from the Krauel Colony in Santa Catharina. It was first called the Curitiba M.B. Church. In 1957 it had 260 members, with Peter Hamm as leader. Jacob Huebert was long elder. As it grew, three daughter churches were organized at Guarituba (1957), Villa Guayra (1957), and Saltobach (1955). H.S.B.

Bowman: see Bauman.

Bowman (Jacob) Mennonite Church (MC), located near Canal Winchester (q.v.), Franklin County, O., southeast of Columbus. Little is known about this church, except that John M. Brenneman, originally living in Fairfield County to the east, lived in Franklin County 1848-55, and was ordained bishop here in 1849, moving in 1855 to Allen County near Elida. H.S.B.

Bragado Mennonite Bible School: see Colegio Biblico.

Brazil Mennonite Mission (MC), under the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities (q.v.), was founded in 1954, and has the following three stations in Sao Paulo State: Bairro Indianapolis (1954), Sertaozinho (1957), and Valinhos (1957). In 1958 the three stations had 7, 7, and 6 baptized members respectively.

In April 1958 the mission board took over the Amazon Valley Indian Mission (q.v.) founded in 1955, with its headquarters at Araguacema, Goias State. H.S.B.

Brenz (I, 419b, 1 f.): Supplement. Melancthon's booklet to which Brenz replied in the title cited by Hege appeared first at Wittenberg in 1528 (probably May); a second edition appeared at Marburg in Oct. 1528, with the Brenz reply attached, which is the title cited by Hege here. The original Wittenberg title was Underricht Philip. Melanct. wider die Lere der Widerteuffer auss dem latein verdeutschet durch Just. Jonas. According to Schottenloher's Bibliographie (# 44218) the Brenz reply appeared in 1558 (with an addition to the title) "published by someone friendly to the Anabaptists." H.S.B.

British Honduras: see Honduras.

Brooklyn (N.Y.) First Mennonite Church was established in 1958 as a mission church located in the Puerto Rican area of the city. It had 8 members. H.S.B.

Brotherly Aid Liability Plan, Leola, Pa., serves the Lancaster Mennonite Conference (MC). It was established on Jan. 1, 1955, and by June 1959 had 1,788 participants. It covers liability for bodily injury and/or property damage caused by the insured party's motor vehicle, but it does not cover damage to the property or injury to the person or the family of the insured party. In 1957 it paid out over $13,000. M.G.

Buckeye (Ariz.) Mennonite Mission (MC) was established as an outpost mission among the colored migrants of the Phoenix area in 1952 by the Sunnyslope (q.v.) Mennonite Church. A meetinghouse was built later and Johnwilliam Boyer was ordained as pastor in 1955. In 1958 Boyer had 12 members under his care. H.S.B.

Buckhorn Mennonite Church (MC), Mathias, W. Va., was organized in 1949 when its meetinghouse was erected. In 1959 it had 30 members, with John F. Shank as pastor. H.S.B.

Buenos Aires (Argentina) Russian Mennonite Church (Evangelische Mennonitische Glaubensgemeinschaft) was begun in 1950, sponsored by the Mennonite Central Committee. Martin Duerksen has served as pastor from the beginning, with support largely from the MCC. Meetings have been held in a rented hall in Villa Bolester, a suburb of Buenos Aires, but a meetinghouse was under construction in 1959. The congregation, which is fully independent although its pastor is a member of the E.M.B. Church (Allianzgemeinde in Paraguay), was officially organized in 1957. The membership in 1958 was 65, with an attendance of c100 at the services. There are 700-800 Mennonites of Russian background in Buenos Aires, whom the congregation seeks to serve. H.S.B.

Buffalo (Pa.) Mennonite Church (MC) is located 4½ miles west of Lewisburg on Route 95. A member of the Lancaster Mennonite Conference, it was established in 1948. The members, numbering 85 in 1958, were served by ministers Jacob G. Brubaker and John H. Erb. M.G.

Buhler Preparatory School: see Hoffnungsau Preparatory School.

Buitenleraar: see Buitenmannen.

Bureau of Guardianship of the Foreign Colonists (Russian, Kantseliaria opekunstva inostrannykh kolonistov), called Fürsorge-Komitee (q.v.) in German, was established in 1818 by Catherine II in connection with the settlement of foreigners in Russia. It was to supervise the activity of the Russian diplomatic representatives in recruiting colonists in foreign countries, to keep a file of lands available for settlement, and to see to it that the foreigners upon their arrival were properly received and aided until they had been settled. This Bureau had the status of a separate ministry and was responsible to the empress, who appointed its chairman. The first chairman was Gregory Orlov, who appointed the other members of the Bureau. It was abolished in 1871. C.K.

David G. Rempel, "The Mennonite Migration to New Russia (1787-1870)," MQR IX (1935) 74.

Burgervlotbrug: see Zijpe.

Burkhard von Ofen: see Braun, Burkhard.

Burkholder, Oscar (1886-1956), a prominent evangelist and Bible teacher (MC), was born at Pickering, Ont., Sept. 24, 1886, the son of Aaron W. and Agnes Wood Burkholder. He received a Biblical training at the Toronto Bible College. He served as pastor of the Cressman Mennonite Church at Breslau, Ont., 1913-54 (ordained bishop 1949). He also served as a teacher in the Ontario Mennonite Bible School 1920-56 and was principal 1948-54. He served on numerous district conference and General Conference committees, was president of the Ontario Mennonite Mission Board for 14 years, and moderator of the Mennonite General Conference 1949-51. He preached over 8,000 sermons; conducted 180 revival meeting series and 89 Bible Conferences. H.S.B.

Burlington (Col.) Mennonite Brethren Church, located on Oak Street, was organized in 1957, its meetinghouse bought and remodeled in 1958. In 1959 it had 36 members, with Eldo Ratzlaff as pastor. H.S.B.

Büro der Molotschnaer Mennonitischer Vereinigung came into being in the Molotschna settlement, Ukraine, Russia, during World War I or the Revolution which followed. Little is known about this organization, which was to give the social, economic, and cultural life of the settlement stability. At the meeting of the Allgemeiner Mennonitischer Kongress (q.v.) in 1917 Johann Willms was the chairman of the Bureau and opened the Kongress in that capacity. The Protokoll of the Kongress gives the impression that the Bureau was well established, had 141 delegates, and that it was instrumental in organizing the Kongress. B. H. Unruh followed Willms as chairman of the Bureau, but little else is known about it. The names "Mennozentrum" and "Zeitweiliges Mennonitisches Zentralbüro" were also used to refer to it. C.K.

Burton Mennonite Church (MC), a member of the Ohio and Eastern Conference, located 3 miles northwest of Burton, Ohio, was organized in 1948 by persons largely of Old Order Amish background. A former Methodist church was purchased. In 1959 the membership was 100, with John F. Garber as pastor-bishop. H.S.B.

Bussemaker, a Dutch Mennonite family since the 16th century. Most of its members lived at Borne and Deventer, where some of them served as deacons.

B. Barlage Bussemaker served for many years as a treasurer of the Zwolsche Weduwfonds. Hendrik Bussemaker (1881-1925), of Deventer, educated at the Amsterdam university and seminary, served as pastor at Hoorn on the island of Texel 1909-15, Zijldijk 1915-24, and Hindeloopen 1924-25. Paulus Bussemaker (q.v.) was apparently not related to the Borne-Deventer Bussemaker family. He was likely identical with Elder Pauwel (q.v.) at Danzig, who served until d.1612. Having been excommunicated by the Flemish, he joined the Danzig Frisian congregation. (Inv. Arch. Amst. II, Nos. 2925 f.; see also II, 2, No. 691; see Bussemaker, Paulus, which this article supplements.) vDZ.

Butler Avenue Mennonite Brethren Church, located at 4884 East Butler Ave., Fresno, Cal., was organized in 1956, and built its meetinghouse in 1957. In 1959 the membership was 147, with Elmer A. Martens as pastor. H.S.B.

Buwo, Bernhardus, was a Reformed minister in East Friesland, Germany, during the time of the Reformation. Little was known about him until Walter Hollweg published an article, "Bernhard Buwo, ein ostfriesischer Theologe aus dem Reformationsjahrhundert," in Jahrbuch der Gesellschaft für bildende Kunst und vaterländische Altertümer zu Emden (Aurich, 1953). In 1556 Buwo published a book in Low German against the Anabaptists entitled Een frundtlyke thosamensprekenge van twee personen, von der Döpe der jungen unmundigen Kynderen . . . (Emden, 1556). The following year a Dutch edition of this book appeared (Emden, 1557), which was followed by a third edition in 1564 and a fourth, revised edition published in Ghent in 1580. In 1563 a German edition followed, translated by Engelbert Faber. Buwo, who (according to Hollweg) was himself influenced by the Anabaptists, used peaceful means in his attempt to win them to the Reformed Church. (See also Covenant Theology.) C.K.

Byntgens, Thomas: see Bintgens.

Calf(f): see Kalf.

Calgary (Alta.) First Mennonite Church (GCM): see Scarboro Mennonite Mission.

Calvaert (Caluwaert, Kalvaert), a former Mennonite family, found in the 16-17th centuries in the Dutch congregations of Haarlem and Leiden. Adriaen Calvaert, who in the early 17th century was a preacher of the Flemish church at Haarlem, published Vertooninghe ende Verantwoordinge tot dienst van allen onsen Medegenoten des Geloofs (Haarlem, 1619). The Calvaerts stemmed from Flanders, Belgium. Here Daniel (q.v.) Calvaerd, of Tiel, died in 1564 as a martyr at Armentières. vDZ.

Calvary Hour, Inc. (MC), a radio program founded in 1936 by Wm. G. Detweiler of Orrville, Ohio, and carried on since his death in 1956 by his sons Bill and Bob Detweiler, with a series of broadcast outlets in the United States and a few foreign countries. It was incorporated in 1946. H.S.B.

Calvary Mennonite Church (MC), La Plata, Puerto Rico, founded in 1946, had 78 members in 1958 with Addona Nissley and Jose A. Santiago as ministers. The church was built in 1946. This is the second Mennonite congregation on the island. Lester Hershey was the first pastor. H.S.B.

Gladys Widmer, We Enter Puerto Rico (Elkhart, 1952).

Calvary Mennonite Mission, Newport News, Va.: see Madison Avenue Chapel.

Camp Friedenswald, a church camp located on Shavehead Lake 7 miles north of Union, Mich., owned and operated by the Central District Conference (GCM) through a committee appointed by the conference, was established in 1950; its first operating season was in 1951. H.S.B.

Camp Hebron (MC), located on Route 2, Halifax, Dauphin Co., Pa., was founded in 1956 and is owned and operated by a board of directors composed of nine members of the Lancaster Mennonite Conference. It provides opportunity for camping for children from the missions of the Lancaster Conference as well as the children of members. The campground is a tract of 315 acres of mostly wooded land on the north slope of Peters Mountain in Powell's Valley c15 miles north of Harrisburg and 25 miles southeast of Halifax. H.S.B.

Camp Luz, located 4 miles south of Orrville, Ohio, was established in 1953 by the Ohio Mennonite Camp Association (MC). H.S.B.

Camp Rehoboth Association, a private association in the Mennonite Church (MC), founded in 1949, owns and operates Camp Rehoboth, a church camp for colored children, located two miles north of Hopkins Park, Ill., address St. Anne, Ill. H.S.B.

Camps, Mennonite Church, although common in Protestant church life in America, were introduced rather late among Mennonites in North America. The first (1938) was Men-O-Lan, the camp of the Eastern District Conference (GCM), near Finland, Bucks Co., Pa. The second GCM camp was Elim Gospel Beach near Swift Current, Sask., owned and operated by the Mennonite Youth Organization of Saskatchewan (1946). The third and fourth GCM camps were Menoscach (1948) near Murdock, Kan., and Friedenswald, near Union, Mich. (1950). Later GCM camps were Palisades in Idaho, Pike Lake near Saskatoon, Sask., Assiniboine Mission Camp near Springstein, Man., and Swan Lake near Viburg, S.D. In the Mennonite Church (MC) camps started somewhat later, but by 1959 a total of twelve camps had been established: Laurelville near Mt. Pleasant, Pa. (1944), Little Eden at Onkama, Mich. (1945), Chesley Lake near Allenford, Ont. (1947), Rehoboth near Hopkins Park, Ill. (1949), Tel-Hai near Gap, Pa. (1950), Rocky Mountain Camp near Colorado Springs, Col. (1951), Luz near Orrville, Ohio (1953), Sholom near Kearney, Ont. (1954), Hebron near Harrisburg, Pa. (1956), Black Rock near Quarryville, Pa. (1956), Perrin Lakes near Sturgis, Mich. (1958), and Menno-Haven near Tiskilwa, Ill. (1959).

The Mennonite Brethren camp program is operated by the district conferences. The district program began as follows: Southern 1941, Pacific 1946, Central 1952. Camp facilities are leased from other organizations. In California Hartland Camp (q.v.) is owned by an M.B.-K.M.B. laymen's organization. The Canadian provincial conferences also have camp programs. In several areas inter-Mennonite camps have been established, especially for children.

Among European Mennonites the Dutch Mennonites alone have developed camps comparable to those in America, and they did so somewhat earlier. Retreat grounds for adults were established by the Gemeentedag (q.v.) Movement at Lunteren (1920), Elspeet (1925), and Schoorl (1932), while the Dutch Peace Group established Fredeshiem (1929). Camps have also been established for boys and girls, the first at Oud-Reemst in 1920, later at Elspeet, Giethoorn, etc. These youth camps are under the General Camp Committee, which is a part of the Commissie voor Doopsgezind Broederschapswerk. In recent years some 15 summer camps for catechumens have been held with c500 participants.

These church camps operate usually only in the summer months, serving as retreat centers for groups of high-school youth, older young people, and adults with varying interests, usually for periods of a week at a time. They combine living in an outdoor environment where wholesome recreation is available with definite spiritual interests. These interests include (1) training in Bible study, missions, church principles and doctrines, (2) help to youth in solving problems confronting young Christians in a secular world, (3) development of personal devotional life, (4) inspirational addresses, (5) evangelism, (6) cultivation of special interests such as church music. H.S.B.

Betty van der Smitten, "Mennonite Church Camp Retreats," Menn. Life X (1955) 123 f.

Canadian Mennonite, The, is an independent weekly tabloid newspaper, five columns, 11½ in. by 16 in., 8-16 pp., published every Friday at Altona, Man., by D. W. Friesen & Sons, Ltd., founded in October 1953. The Canadian Mennonite seeks to serve all Mennonite groups and communities in Canada. It is the first English-language Mennonite newspaper of its kind in Canada. The circulation after six years is c3,500. The editor since its founding has been Frank H. Epp. Serving as associate editor is Aaron Klassen. F.H.E.

Canadian Mennonite Mutual Insurance, Altona, Man., was established in 1923 and incorporated in 1948. Providing protection against fire losses, it covered $2,263,249 worth of property of approximately 300 members in 1959. Most of its clients were Mennonites. M.G.

Canal Winchester, a town in northeastern Fairfield County, Ohio, near which a Mennonite settlement was started about 1842 by settlers from Franklin County, Pa. Their church, however, and perhaps the settlement, was located across the county line west in Franklin County. The congregation is reported by Daniel Kauffman to have had as many as 60 members, but it had become extinct before the publishing of the Hartzler and Kauffman Mennonite Church History in 1905. This was possibly the Bowman (q.v., Supplement) congregation. M.G.

Canton (Okla.) Cheyenne Mennonite Mission Church (GCM) serves the more than 100 Cheyenne Indians living in Custer County between Thomas and Weatherford. This field was turned over to the Mennonites in 1924. On Nov. 11, 1928, a congregation of eleven members was organized and on Feb. 23, 1930, the church, 6½ miles south of Thomas, was dedicated. The following missionaries have served in this field: J. B. Ediger 1924-29 and 1936-47, H. J. Kliever 1929-36, Arthur Friesen 1947, H. M. Dalke 1947-54, August Schmidt 1954-. The membership in 1955 was 37. A.Sch.

Carel van Gent: see Karel van Gent.

Carman (Man.) Mennonite Church (GCM) was founded in 1948 as a mission, organized as a congregation in 1951, and joined the Bergthaler Church in 1956, which supplies the ministers. The meetinghouse was built in 1948. In 1959 the membership was 35. H.S.B.

Carolina: see North Carolina.

Cass Lake (Minn.) Mennonite Church (MC) is located 5 miles south and 1 mile east of town. Begun as a mission station in 1948, it was organized as a congregation in 1954. It had 23 members in 1959, with Harry Gascho as pastor. M.G.

Cassel Amish Mennonite Church, located one mile east of the village of Cassel in East Zorra Twp., Oxford Co., Ont., is a branch of the East Zorra A.M. congregation and a member of the Ontario A.M. Conference. In 1935 an unused Evangelical church built in 1900 was first rented for a period of several months to relieve the congested condition at the home church, then bought. The church is a well-built edifice of white brick with a seating capacity of about 200. In 1958 some 200 members worshiped at Cassel, with Joel Schwartzentruber and Vernon Zehr as ministers. Its membership is included in that of the East Zorra congregation. R.T.B.

Catlett (Va.) Beachy Amish Church, located 2½ miles northwest of Catlett in Fauquier County, was organized in 1950. Its meetinghouse was built in 1951. In 1958 it had 42 members, with Daniel J. Nissley as bishop-pastor. H.S.B.

Cayey-Altura Mennonite Church (MC), a mission in the city of Cayey, Puerto Rico, was begun in 1953. In 1958 it had a membership of 17, with Fidel Santiago in charge. H.S.B.

Cazenovia (Ill.) Mennonite Church (MC) was established in 1949 and had a membership of 21 in 1958. Melvin Hamilton was its pastor. M.G.

Cedar Grove Beachy Amish Mennonite Church was established in 1912 by a conservative schism from the Mapleview (q.v., Wellesley, Ont.) A.M. congregation, in Wellesley Township, Waterloo Co., led by Bishop Jacob Lichti, and hence is called locally the Lichti group. It built its meetinghouse in 1912 a half mile east of the Poole meetinghouse in Wellesley Township. It is very conservative in spirit though having a meetinghouse. It still uses the German language, and the Ausbund in singing. In 1958 it had 200 members, with Samuel Roth as bishop and Samuel Lichti and Noah Gerber as preachers. H.S.B.

Central Christian High School, 801 Chemical St., Hutchinson, Kan., was incorporated in 1948 as the Central Kansas Bible Academy and opened in 1950 with 5 instructors and an enrollment of 41. Walter O. Ediger served as its principal 1950-59. The name of the school was changed from academy to high school in 1956. The board of directors has representatives from the G.C.M. (4), M.B. (3), K.M.B. (1), and M.C. (1) groups. Its catalogue calls it "inter-Mennonite in control and interdenominational in practice." It offers a four-year accredited high-school course. Its 1958-59 enrollment was 101, representing six Mennonite branches. The school publishes a monthly bulletin, The Central Lighthouse. M.G.

Central District Reporter is the official organ of the Central District of the General Conference Mennonite Church. The merger agreement between the Central Conference of Mennonites and the Middle District of the G.C.M. Church called for the discontinuance of the Christian Evangel (q.v.), organ of the former, with the June issue of 1957 (the end of volume 47 of the Evangel), and the launching of a new publication. Robert W. Hartzler was named editor of the new magazine, which appeared for the first time in July 1957. Although the place of publication has been Goshen, Ind., from the beginning, the issues of 1957 were printed and distributed from Newton, Kan. An 8-page, 9 x 12 in. monthly, it confines itself to reporting activities of the conference and its constituent congregations, institutions, and individual members. N.P.S.

Central Kansas Bible Academy: see Central Christian High School.

Centralia (Mo.) Defenseless Mennonite Church (now extinct) was begun in this north-central Missouri area in 1903 ff., reportedly by the Joseph Rediger family. In 1906 J. K. Gerig of Grabill, Ind., held revival meetings in the Centralia settlement. Soon after these meetings a church was organized, and a meetinghouse was constructed in 1907 about 6 miles southeast of Centralia. The highest membership was 55. Ministers serving in the church were Levi Zehr and Sam Ehresman. Because of adverse economic conditions the Mennonites sold their farms and in 1918 their meetinghouse. Most of the families moved to Ohio and Indiana. E.E.Z.

Chappell Mennonite Church (MC), Chappell, Neb., listed in the Mennonite Yearbook up to 1953 as East Fairview (q.v.), constructed a new church in Chappell in 1958-59. In 1958 the members living near Julesburg, Col., formed a separate congregation under the Iowa-Nebraska Conference and built a meetinghouse in Julesburg (q.v.). The Chappell church, with a membership of 20, then joined the South Central Conference. The community was established in 1886, rather than in 1883 as elsewhere stated. M.G.

Charity Committee of the Western District of the General Conference Mennonite Church is a committee whose primary responsibility is the aid and support of such destitute persons within the geographical limits of the Western District as are not provided for by individual churches. Its work began in 1893 when David Goerz, chairman of the Western District Conference, appointed a committee whose immediate purpose it should be to provide seed wheat for Mennonite settlers in Hodgeman County, Kan. The committee was also authorized to give other aid as needed. The following year this committee became permanent. Its total receipts in 1958 amounted to $1,507. J.F.S.

Chelyabinsk district, located east of Southern Urals of Asiatic Soviet Russia, capital city Chelyabinsk, has much agricultural and forested land with large coal deposits. After World War I iron deposits were discovered which have transformed a part of the region into an industrial area. Chief cities are Chelyabinsk, Magnitogorsk, Zlatoust, and Troitsk. During World War II the eastern part of the region was separated and organized as Kurgan (q.v.) region. During the period of exile and World War I many of the Mennonites were sent to this region, particularly the industrial areas. Numerous letters have been published in the Canadian papers which give us some information about their life. (See also Siberia.) C.K.

Christian Laymen's Evangelistic Association, Inc., was organized by a group of laymen (MC) largely around Orrville, Ohio, to promote evangelistic tent campaigns and city-wide crusades. Its evangelist at first was Howard Hammer, and after his departure to Brazil as a missionary in 1955 he was succeeded by Myron Augsburg. H.S.B.

Christian Mennonite Church (GCM), now extinct, located at Meno, Okla., joined the General Conference in 1929 with 21 members but no minister. It was dissolved in 1933. H.S.B.

Christian Mission Conservative Mennonite Church is located one mile north and one west of Berne, Ind. The congregation was organized in 1956 and in 1959 had 34 members, with William J. Stutzman as its pastor. M.G.

Christian Service Foundation, Inc., Ft. Wayne, Ind., is a nonprofit organization serving the entire Evangelical Mennonite Church by offering financial help to local churches for building projects, loans and scholarships to students in higher institutions of learning, and also personal loans when funds are available. M.G.

Christliche Bildungs-Anstalt der Mennoniten Gemeinschaft: see Wadsworth Mennonite School.

Christlicher Dienst (Voluntary Service) is an organization among the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay, to provide service for young people outside the colonies on the same basis as Voluntary Service does in North America. Each colony is to have a C.S. Committee, with the Fernheim Colony committee serving as the general co-ordinating committee and Martin Duerksen of Buenos Aires appointed by the MCC to serve as liaison and promoter. The first unit, located at the Paraguayan government mental hospital at Asuncion, began in Feb., 1957, where a team of two workers is maintained. Another unit is at the MCC Leprosy project in East Paraguay. Two additional programs opened in 1958 include a government T.B. sanatorium and a Salvation Army Children's Home. The name Christlicher Dienst emphasizes the Christian character of the service and candidates are carefully chosen from this point of view. Fr.W.

Christopher Dock Mennonite School, a Mennonite high school named for the noted colonial Mennonite schoolmaster Christopher Dock, founded in 1954, is owned and operated by a board of trustees appointed by the Franconia Mennonite Conference (MC). It is located near Lansdale, Pa., in a former estate building remodeled into an academic building. Its principal from the beginning has been Richard Detweiler. The enrollment in 1958-59 was 198. H.S.B.

Christus Allein (Christ Alone), a monthly 4-page (occasionally 8 pages) German supplement to the French Mennonite monthly Christ Seul, first number June 1947, edited to July 1956 by Daniel Wenger of Basel, Switzerland, followed by Ernst Hege. It carried for a time the subtitle "News from the Alsatian Churches." H.S.B.

Church Bulletins are used in printed or mimeographed form by many congregations of most Mennonite conferences as a guide for the worship service and a source of information on the affairs of the congregation, its members, the minister, Sunday school, conference program, etc. The bulletins consist of two to six pages. As a rule the cover is printed by publishing houses and the contents supplied by the local congregations. The BeCL and GCL collect bulletins from their respective constituencies. These bulletins are a good source of information on current activities of the congregations. C.K.

Church Letters to certify that a member has been baptized and is a member in good standing in a congregation are used in Mennonite churches, usually for the purpose of transferring membership from one congregation to another. It can be assumed that this practice dates back to the first centuries, particularly among the congregations of Dutch, Prussian, or Russian background. Sometimes the church letters consisted of a printed form filled out by the elder. Numerous letters have been preserved, particularly those of the immigrants of 1874. Some Mennonite groups, notably the Mennonite Church (MC), also issue "conference letters" to ministers who transfer to other conferences. (See also Church Seals.) C.K.

Church of the Bible (EMB): see Sun Valley.

Church Penance: see Horb.

Churches of God (General Eldership), popularly called Winebrennerians for the founder John Winebrenner, was organized in 1830 at Harrisburg, Pa., where it still has its headquarters. It emerged from the revivalistic preaching (in and around Harrisburg) of Winebrenner (1797-1860), a German Reformed minister of Frederick County, Md., ordained at Hagerstown, Md., in 1820, who severed his connections with his church in 1825. Winebrenner taught a strict nonconformity to the world along with his revivalism, and instituted footwashing as an ordinance, also baptism by immersion. No doubt numbers of Mennonites (MC) in the region adjoining Harrisburg (Lancaster Conference) were won as adherents to the new faith, although no outstanding personalities of such transfers are known. In 1958 the membership was 35,700. H.S.B.

Claassen (Claesen), Jacob, was an elder of the Jan-jacobsgezinden (q.v.), a former branch of the Dutch Mennonites. He was ordained in 1612 and baptized 792 persons. (Inv. Arch. Amst. II, 2, No. 9a.)

vdZ.

Claes Claesz, an Anabaptist martyr, beheaded at Leiden, Holland, on Dec. 20, 1539. Particulars are lacking. (Mellink, Wederdopers, 204.)

vdZ.

Claesz, Jan: see Klaasz, Jan.

Clarence Center (N.Y.) Mennonite church (GCM), now extinct, was formed in 1875 as a schism from the Clarence Center (MC) congregation when the minister Jacob Krehbiel, Jr., withdrew with about a dozen families. The group affiliated with the GCM body c1880, and the Middle District Conference in 1889. The highest membership was 45 in 1896 but by 1917, when Krehbiel retired, it was only 18. The church was then disbanded. H.S.B.

Classen, David Ivanovitch: see Claassen, David I.

Clevelandia (Brazil) Mennonite Brethren Church was organized in 1955. Its meetinghouse was built in 1956. In 1957 its membership was 58, with Jacob Kasdorf as leader. Clevelandia is in the southwest part of the state of Parana, near the Santa Catharina border. H.S.B.

Clinton (Okla.) First Mennonite Church (GCM) is located at 19th and Opal streets. It was established in 1951 and had 65 members in 1958, with Walter H. Regier as minister. H.S.B.

Coamo Mennonite Church, Coamo, Puerto Rico, was founded in 1953 as an outpost of the Bethany congregation. In 1958 it had 17 members, with Samuel Rolon as pastor. H.S.B.

Coffman, Samuel Frederic (1872-1954), a leading bishop in the Mennonite (MC) Church in Ontario (Vineland), was born near Dale Enterprise, Rockingham Co., Va., on June 11, 1872, the son of Preacher John S. and Elizabeth J. (Heatwole) Coffman (q.v.). On Nov. 20, 1901, he married Ella Mann (d. 1935) of Elkhart, Ind. They had 5 children, all born at Vineland: John, Magdalena, David, Barbara, and Ellen.

Samuel spent most of his school years in Elkhart County, Ind., where his family had moved in 1879. He was graduated from the Elkhart High School in 1890, one of the first Mennonite high-school graduates in the Middle West. He attended the Moody Bible Institute 1894-95 and for six months in 1897-98. In 1890-94 he worked for the Mennonite Publishing Company at Elkhart. He was converted at meetings held in Elkhart by his father and was baptized on May 26, 1888. He was elected superintendent of the Elkhart Mennonite Sunday school on Dec. 28, 1893. In 1894-95 he served in the Mennonite Home Mission at Chicago. Here he was ordained to the ministry on April 21, 1895, by John F. Funk of Elkhart; he was ordained bishop at Vineland, Ont., on Sept. 26, 1903.

Coffman served widely in his denomination beyond the borders of his own congregation and conference. He was moderator of the Ontario Conference in 1911 and 1933. He also served as secretary of the General Conference for a time. He was a member of the following General Conference committees: Music Committee from the first (1911) until 1947; Peace Problems Committee 1925-49; Historical Committee from the first (1911) and its chairman 1911-47; General Sunday School Committee from its beginning in 1915 until it was incorporated into the Commission for Christian Education and Young People's Work in 1937. He served for a time on the Missions Committee of the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities. He served on the Mennonite Board of Education from the first (1905) until about 1944, serving as secretary for about 20 years. He also served on the Publication Board and its Publishing Committee. He was the founder and served as principal of the Ontario Mennonite Bible School at Kitchener, Ont., 1907-47. He was editor of the Bible study department of the Christian Monitor from the beginning of its publication in 1909 until 1953. During his service as hymn editor of the Music Committee the following books appeared at Scottdale, Pa.: Church and Sunday School Hymnal Supplement (1911); Life Songs (1916), of which he was coeditor; Church Hymnal (1927); Songs of Cheer for Children (1928); and Life Songs No. 2 (1938), of which he was editor.

He served as pastor of the Moyer congregation at Vineland 1902-d.54, and as bishop of the Niagara District from 1903. He was a charter member of the Nonresistant Relief Organization in Ontario, organized in 1918, and its secretary 1920-54. He was appointed the special correspondent with the Canadian government regarding military service and the immigration of the Russian Mennonites in 1918. He was associated with the Canadian Mennonite Board of Colonization 1922-44 and actively aided the immigration from Russia to Ontario 1922-25. In his earlier ministry he was widely used in Bible conference and evangelistic work. In 1901 on a commission from the Ontario Conference he organized a number of congregations and ordained ministers and deacons in Alberta. He died at Vineland on June 28, 1954. He was one of the outstanding figures of the Mennonite Church (MC) throughout his more than half-century of service in the ministry, and made an extraordinary and lasting contribution to it, always a man of vision, constructive and peace-loving, widely beloved and highly regarded. R.S.K.

Colegio Biblica Evangelico Menonita (MC), Bragado, Argentina, formerly called Bragado Bible School, was operated in 1935-58 by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities with the aid of a local advisory committee elected by the Argentine Mennonite Conference for the purpose of training Argentine Christian workers. In 1958 it was merged with the Mennonite Biblical Seminary (q.v.) at Montevideo, Uruguay. Its average enrollment was 12-15 students. H.S.B.

Collection of Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs, Suited to the Various Occasions of Public Worship and Private Devotion of the Church of Christ, the first English hymnbook of the American Mennonites, was published at Harrisonburg, Va., in 1847 (called, however, A Selection instead of Collection), reprinted 6 times at Mountain Valley (Singers Glen), Va. (1851, 1855, 1859, 1868, 1872, 1877), by Joseph Funk & Sons (last two editions by Joseph Funk's Sons); also reprinted 4 times by John Baer's Sons at Lancaster (1862, 1864, 1869, 1875) and 3 times by the Mennonite Publishing Company at Elkhart (1880, 1883, 1884, jointly published at Elkhart by John F. Funk 1868, 1872) and was reprinted at Scottsdale in 1948, 1953, and 1958. This small hymnal without musical notation, and with 363 hymns (ultimately 402 plus 65 in an appendix) was edited by a committee composed of Joseph Funk, David Hartman, Joseph Wenger. It carried a German appendix of 27 hymns (later 37) from 1857. H.S.B.

Colorado Springs (Col.) First Mennonite Church (MC) is the congregation formerly called Manitou (q.v.), which changed its name when it moved to 11 N. 22nd Street, Colorado Springs, on Sept. 19, 1948. In 1958 the membership was 67, with Jacob Weirich as pastor. H.S.B.

Commemorative Medals (I, 648): Supplement. A medal was issued in 1835 to commemorate the centennial of the Amsterdam seminary and the tricentennial of Menno Simons' leaving the Catholic Church. The medal, engraved by van der Kellen, shows the muse of eloquence standing near a pulpit. There are also many medals of c1647, often in silver or gold, issued by Dutch Mennonites to commemorate their silver or gold weddings. These medals are also important for Mennonite history. vdZ.

Commisaris, name from 1775 given to the elders or "opzieners" of the Groningen Old Flemish conference in the Netherlands. In the Frisian conference of North Holland this name is also found from c1724 for what formerly was called "landsdienaar" (traveling elder). (Blaupot t. C., Groningen I, 135 f.; idem, Holland II, 84.) vdZ.

Commission for Foreign Needs: see Fonds voor Buitenlandsche Nooden.

Community Mennonite Church (GCM), located in Markham, Ill., a suburb of Chicago, was organized in March 1957 with 18 charter members and has been meeting in its new church since Christmas 1958. Ronald Krehbiel was its pastor in 1959. M.G.

Conference Visitor is a monthly multilithed publication produced by the executive secretaries of the General Conference Mennonite Church and its boards for ministers and interested church workers. It was first issued in April 1952, and deals with concerns related to the Conference's mission and service program. M.S.H.

Confessie ende Vredehandelinge (Haarlem, 1633) is a 48-page booklet (copy in AML) dealing with the unification of the Dutch Flemish Mennonites with the Old Flemish at Dordrecht in 1632. It contains a preface, an introduction, and the Dordrecht (q.v.) confession by Adriaan Cornelisz (q.v.). vdZ.

Confession, Public, as a means of discipline was practiced by the Anabaptists, and long after by the Mennonites in all countries. It is still practiced by many of the Mennonite groups in North America. The most common practice is for the guilty member to stand in the meeting, state his transgression (or have it stated for him by the bishop or pastor), and ask forgiveness of the congregation. The minister in charge then takes the vote of the congregation regarding forgiveness and restoration, or if he is empowered to do so, may simply state the forgiveness himself. In some congregations the confession is made to the church council or the board of deacons and dealt with by it. In cases of gross sin it has been the custom in the more conservative congregations to consider the member expelled, even though he is immediately restored; the entire confession and restoration is then made with the transgressor kneeling. This is called "receiving from the knees," and is in a sense the equivalent of renewal of baptism. In some areas of the Mennonite Church (MC) it is required that the one guilty of gross sin remain "banned," i.e., outside the church, for a month, before he can be restored to fellowship as a member. The Anabaptist-Mennonite practice of public confession is similar to that of the first centuries of the Christian church before public confession was discontinued and private confession to the priest was substituted. (See Discipline, Ban.) H.S.B.

Conservative Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities was established in 1919 to serve the Conservative (Amish) Mennonite Conference. Besides home missions in the United States it operates a foreign mission at Espelkamp, Germany, and co-operates with the Eastern Mennonite Board (q.v.) in the Luxembourg-France mission. H.S.B.

Cornelis de Gijsselaer: see Cornelis Cornelisz.

Costume: see Dress.

Cottage City Mennonite Church: see Cottage City Mennonite Suburban Mission.

Croghan Conservative Mennonite Church: see Lowville-Croghan Conservative Mennonite Church.

Crossroads Bible Church (MC), Mississippi: see Wayside Mennonite Church.

Cuba Mennonite Mission (MC), founded in 1954 by the Franconia Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, had six missionaries and 13 baptized members in 1958. H.S.B.

Daalder, a Dutch Mennonite family on the island of Texel. Many of them served here as deacons; Dirk Reyertsz Daalder was a lay preacher of the Waterlander congregation at Den Hoorn, Texel, 1713-33. Simon Martinus Anton Daalder (b. 1905), educated at the university and seminary at Amsterdam, was pastor of Veendam-Pekela 1933-36, Heerlen-Eindhoven 1936-42, Enschedé 1942-45, and Haarlem 1945. Enno Daalder (b. 1915), also educated at the university and the Amsterdam seminary, was pastor at Oldeboorn 1942-47, Westzaan 1947-51, and Dantumawoude 1951-56. vbZ.

Daily Prayer Guide: see Prayer Guide.

Dantuma: see Roelofs.

Danzig Werder: see Marienburg Werder.

Dauber (Tauber), Hans, of Illingen, Württemberg, an Anabaptist, had won a following in Illingen and was arrested, probably in 1581. He was in prison continuously at least until 1617, 1581-82 in Maulbronn, 1582-88 in Hohenurach, 1588-1617 in Hohenwittlingen. In Hohenwittlingen Simon Kress (q.v.) was also long in confinement. (TA Württemberg.) H.S.B.

D'Auchy, Jacques: see Jacques D'Auchy.

Daytonville Mennonite Church (MC), Wellman, Ia., is located in the village of Daytonville, a mile north-east of Wellman. The congregation was established in 1951. The membership was 82 in 1958; Ezra W. Shank was the pastor. M.G.

Deaf, First Mennonite Church for the. The First Mennonite Church for the Deaf in the Lancaster (MC) Conference was begun under authorization of the Lancaster board of bishops in the fall of 1945, with J. Paul Graybill and Aaron H. Weaver in charge. By Dec. 29, 1946, Rossmere meetinghouse in Lancaster city was used for this purpose every second Saturday evening. Soon Reuben Stoltzfus became Aaron Weaver's associate. In 1949 Israel D. Rohrer was ordained as pastor. By 1951 they also used the second floor of the Mellinger meetinghouse. By 1953 Sunday school at the latter place was added. On Aug. 18, 1956, George A. Uhler was ordained to assist. A new meetinghouse for this work, located off the Lincoln Highway East, six miles east of Lancaster, was dedicated on May 12, 1957. With Rohrer and Uhler as pastors and Elmer G. Martin as bishop, the membership in 1958 was 15, with a Sunday school of 34, and a summer Bible school at Roxbury, Franklin County, Pa., of 94. The basement of the meetinghouse east of Lancaster was being used for the Lancaster Mennonite Conference Information Center in 1958-59, a project under the Eastern Board of Missions and Charities. I.D.L.

Deer Park (Wash.) First Mennonite Church (GCM), now extinct, was established as a result of a colonization attempt for Russian Mennonite refugees from Harbin, China, 1929-30, sponsored by H. P. Krehbiel. It joined the Pacific District (GCM) Conference in 1939, when it had a membership of c25, but it disbanded in 1943 when the members moved away, largely to Newport, some 30 miles north. H.S.B.

Delaplaine Amish Mennonite Church, now extinct, located in Greene County, Mo., was organized by John Hartzler and Levi Miller of Cass County in May 1895. Among the members were C. S. Weaver, J. B. Mischler, and J. B. Schrock, who were appointed on a meetinghouse building committee. The Mennonite meeting calendars of that decade make no reference to the congregation. M.G.

Den Helder: see Helder.

Denlinger, Mary (1867-1958), Mennonite mission worker and leader in women's activities, was born Dec. 3, 1867, in Paradise Twp., Lancaster Co., Pa., the third child of Elizabeth Shaub and John B. Denlinger. In 1890 she became a member of the Paradise congregation through the preaching of John S. Coffman. En route to the Elkhart Sunday School Conference in 1894 Abram Metzler recruited her for the new Chicago Mission opened by M. S. Steiner. Here she served for five years. Then she and Amanda Musselman opened the Philadelphia Mission, where she served for the next quarter century. After that she continued her church interest at East Chestnut Street and Paradise congregations in both Sunday-school and sewing circle work. She died Jan. 22, 1958. I.D.L.

Denver Mennonite Church (MC) is located on the northeastern edge of this thriving borough of 1800 in Lancaster County, Pa. Among the early settlers here were the John Bucher, Michael Bear, John Shirk, Jacob Polinger, and Huber families. In 1760 they were worshipping at Hershberger's farm on the west side of Union Station, hence known by his name. It was a part of the Hammer Creek Bishop District and the Indiantown circuit. In 1877 a brick union church was built for the use of German Baptists, German (Old and New) Mennonites, German Lutheran and Reformed in Bucher's of East Cocalico, on a six weeks' schedule, one group meeting each six weeks. The Reformed and the Lutherans built in the borough in 1890 (separating from the others in 1912). On May 8, 1928, the New (Reformed) Mennonites relinquished all rights to the house. The building was thoroughly renovated and Sunday-school rooms added, with an opening on March 13, 1955. An old cemetery adjoins. In 1958 Isaac K. Sensenig was pastor, assisted by the Indiantown ministry, with a membership of 38. I.D.L.

Deutsche Mennonitenhilfe, from May 9, 1922, to its dissolution on Dec. 19, 1926, the name adopted by the Mennonitische Flüchtlingsfürsorge (q.v.). H.S.B.

Dewey (Ill.) Mennonite Church (MC) was established in 1941. It had a membership of 36 in 1958, with Ivan L. Birkey as pastor. M.G.

Dhamtari Christian Hospital, Madhya Pradesh, India, established by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities (MC), is now owned and operated by the Mennonite Church in India. This 110-bed general hospital is the outgrowth of the first medical dispensary, begun in 1900, but the first hospital building was erected in 1924. H.S.B.

Dijk, van, a common Dutch family name, also Mennonite. Besides the Jan van Dijk found in ME II, 61, another Jan van Dijk was a preacher of the Danzig Old Flemish church in Amsterdam in 1727-54, as was his son Pieter van Dijk (d.1803) in 1754-89. There was also a Mennonite van Dijk family at Hamburg, Germany. Sara van Dijk (1714-60) of this family in 1737 married Herman Rahusen (1697-1760). vdZ.

Dirk of Wormer: see Dirck van Wormer.

Discipleship. It was the particular genius of 16th-century Anabaptism to interpret the essence of Christianity as discipleship to Christ (Nachfolge Christi). By this the Anabaptists meant something definite in experience, not just a connection with the church, or an espousal of the traditional doctrines of Christianity, or even doing good works. In their understanding the individual responds to the call of Christ, forsakes his life of sin and self, receives a new nature, comes under the lordship of Christ, and takes Christ's life and teachings as normative for himself and for the church, and indeed ultimately for the whole social order. His faith in Christ thus finds expression in "newness of life"; this expression and similar ones such as "a new creature" were common. The uniqueness of Anabaptism lies in its conviction that Christ is more than a divine being to be worshiped, more than a Saviour who brings forgiveness through the cross and deliverance from the penalty and power of sin; He is the Lord to be followed and obeyed, and with whom the Christian enters into a covenant that controls his whole life. Henceforth his life is to be lived so that Christ's life and teachings are to be concretely and realistically expressed by him in principle, in the context of the kingdom of God. This interpretation of Christianity with its attendant concept of the church as a fellowship of obedient disciples, and with its ethic of love, stands in contrast to the Lutheranism of the Reformation whose central emphasis upon man's alienation from God and his restoration (justification) by the grace of God, resulted in the interpretation of Christianity primarily as the experience of forgiveness.

The two Reformation movements, Lutheranism and Anabaptism, with their differing ideological foci, were consciously in opposition to each other. Lutheranism saw in Anabaptist discipleship a works-righteousness and legalism, while Anabaptism saw in Luther's "faith only"—justification a lifeless faith and a compromise with the claims and call of Christ. The two positions, purified of extremes and misunderstandings, are not in necessary conflict, but should be complementary parts of a full New Testament Christianity.

To describe in detail the meaning of discipleship as the Anabaptists saw it would mean an extensive exposition of their theology and ethics, which is impossible here. Major aspects of the concept include: (1) holy living; (2) suffering in the spirit of Christ, bearing the cross; (3) the practice of love and nonresistance; (4) separation from the world of sin and evil; (5) full brotherhood in the church; (6) obedience to the great commission; (7) a disciplined church; (8) rejection of the use of power by the Christian (e.g., state offices).

In adopting this concept of discipleship the Anabaptists committed themselves existentially to Christ without calculating all the consequences. They did realize that their stand meant a break with the continuity of the past "Christian" social order, the corpus christianum, and they consciously took this step. They saw the world as divided into two kingdoms, with the Christian partaking in only one, the kingdom of God, and standing in conflict with the other.

While the Anabaptist vision of discipleship is theoretically clear, its implications have not always been clear to those who have espoused it, Anabaptists, Mennonites, or others. Just how is it to be applied in all respects? For many it has meant withdrawal from the world as we know it in order to share the intimate fellowship and high standards of the Christian brotherhood, not always escaping in the process the temptations of legalism and externalism. Others, having either deliberately or unconsciously moved out into the world, lost much of the essence of the original vision and adopted the common compromises of traditional Christianity with the absolutes of Christ. The current spiritual renaissance among Mennonites, particularly in North America, has led to a critical re-examination of the contemporary Mennonite performance in the light of the high discipleship concept, and a search for a fuller and more effective expression of the concept in the context of the modern world.

Where Anabaptist discipleship has been kept from descending into mere ethics or even moralism, it has been by the strong sense of identification with Christ in personal love and dedication, including identification with Him in His sufferings and in His ultimate victory. The Anabaptists had a strong sense of history and of God at work in it, and hence also of eschatology. This sense, combined with their experience of suffering under persecution, produced their "theology of martyrdom," as Ethelbert Stauffer has called it, which was not merely a source of consolation in trial but a real theology of victory.

The Anabaptist concept of discipleship is to be distinguished from another historic concept of following Christ, the one set forth by Thomas à Kempis in his Imitation of Christ, written about a century before the Reformation. This book, for all its urging upon the Christian disciple the imitation of the character of his Master by the conquest of the human passions and the vices to which they lead, and its call for the production of the virtues of Christ, is concerned primarily with the inner world of the soul where the Christian is to cultivate his spiritual life with his eye upon heaven as his goal. Self-renunciation and resignation are the highest virtues; it is mysticism mixed with asceticism. The ideal is withdrawal from society for contemplation; hence the social dimension is almost completely lacking, and there is no criticism of the social or religious order with a view to establishing a full Christian order in the brotherhood and church of the living Christ in the midst of the present world. Thomas à Kempis and the many who follow his concept evade the conflict with the world, and thus escape the cross-bearing experience of true discipleship. Thomas has more kinship with the later Pietists than with the Anabaptists.

The idea of discipleship is not unique with Anabaptism; it has appeared in various forms through the centuries both before and after the Reformation. It was the vision of the earliest Christians, of certain groups through the Middle Ages, of Peter Chelcicki of Bohemia (1390-1460), spiritual father of the Bohemian Brethren, of George Fox, of John Wesley, and others, although it did not always take the same form as in Anabaptism. It has been a recurring creative idea throughout Christian history. It was the mission of the Anabaptists to give powerful expression to this vision at a creative moment in history, at the beginning of the "Modern Age," and not only to enunciate the vision but to strive earnestly to put it into practice. But they were ahead of their time. Caught in the crushing grip of a church and state which refused their vision, they were almost destroyed, and largely prevented from becoming a significant factor in the ongoing life of western Christendom. But their vision has survived and continued to challenge the modern church. (See also Ethics.)

H.S.B.

H. S. Bender, "The Anabaptist Vision," The Recovery of the Anabaptist Vision (Scottsdale, 1957) 29-54; idem, "The Anabaptist Theology of Discipleship," MQR XXIV (1950) 25-32; J. Lawrence Burkholder, "The Anabaptist Vision of Discipleship," Recovery, 135-51; F. H. Littell, The Anabaptist View of the Church (Philadelphia, 1952).

Domain (Man.) Mennonite Brethren Church was organized in 1926, and built its meetinghouse in 1952. In 1959 the membership was 50, with Jacob Pauls as pastor. It was formerly called the Osborne (q.v.) M.B. Church.

F.C.P.

Don Region, located on the west side of the Don River, Russia, also known as the "Territory of the Don Cossacks," contained a number of small Mennonite settlements. At the mouth of the Don River, west of the city of Rostov, was the Mariupol Mennonite Brethren Church (q.v.) which was organized by M.B. evangelists from the Molotschna settlement. The Planerkolonie (q.v.), located north of Berdyansk (q.v.), consisted primarily of non-Mennonite German settlers, largely Lutheran. Near-by was the Bergthal Mennonite Settlement (q.v.), which was dissolved in 1874 when the settlers went to Canada; the five Mennonite villages were incorporated into the Planer settlement. The Planer settlement spread into the eastern part of the Don Basin. Another daughter settlement of Planer originated north of Berdyansk, consisting of the villages of Neuhoffnung, Neuhoffnungsthal, Rosenfeld, and Neu-Stuttgart. It was here that Eduard Wüst began his evangelistic activities, which spread into the Molotschna Mennonite settlement causing the founding of the Mennonite Brethren. A small Mennonite settlement in the Don Region was the town of Millerovo (q.v.), which became an industrial center of the Mennonites. (See Millerovo Mennonite Brethren Church.) In addition to Millerovo and Mariupol, the towns of Taganrog and Rostov had some Mennonite population.

C.K.

J. A. Malinowsky, Die Planerkolonien am Asowschen Meere (Stuttgart, 1928).

Donnersbergerhof: see Donnersberg.

Dörksen, Abraham, leader and elder of the conservative wing of the Bergthal Mennonite Church of the West Reserve of Manitoba, which became known as the Sommerfeld Mennonite Church (q.v.). Abraham Dörksen and his followers opposed the progressive educational and religious ideas promoted by the Elder Johann K. Funk (q.v.), of the Bergthal Church, and Heinrich H. Ewert (q.v.), principal of the Gretna Collegiate Institute (q.v.). Dörksen and his group also strongly opposed the public school system which the Canadian government was introducing among the Mennonites, desiring to maintain the old practice brought from Russia of conducting their own school system without interference from the outside. In his conservatism Dörksen was closely related to the leaders of the Chortitz Mennonite Church (q.v.) of the East Reserve and the Old Colony Mennonites (q.v.) of the West Reserve. Additional information and data about his life and activities are not available, but his active leadership falls approximately in the period 1880-1900.

C.K.

E. K. Francis, In Search of Utopia (Altona, 1955); Cornelius Krahn, "Adventure in Conviction. Russia, Canada and Mexico" (manuscript); C. A. Dawson, Group Settlement. Ethnic Communities in Western Canada (Toronto, 1936); Paul J. Schaefer, Heinrich H. Ewert, Lehrer, Erzieher und Prediger der Mennoniten (Gretna, 1945).

Dos Palos Mennonite Church (GCM) in Merced County, Cal., about 50 miles northwest of Reedley, was in existence 1930-33 with Dan Gerig as pastor. It was discontinued because of failure of promised water for irrigation.

H.S.B.

Dosidorf (Zabara), a Mennonite village in Volhynia: see Waldheim.

Doves, a Dutch Mennonite family in the province of North Holland. Jan Dirkssen Doves was an untrained preacher of Oude Zijpe and later until c1755 of the Waterlander Barsingerhorn-Nieuwe Zijp congregation.

vdZ.

Drebbel, Cornelis Jacobsz (Alkmaar, 1572-London, 1633), a noted artist, scientist, engineer, and inventor, among whose inventions was a submarine, was a Dutch Mennonite.

vdZ.

H. A. Naber, De ster van 1572 (Amsterdam, 1907).

Duerksen (Dürksen, Derksen, Doerksen, Dirks, Derks, and Dirksen, q.v.) was a common Mennonite family name originating in the Netherlands from the given name "Dirk." Common in Prussia, Russia, and North and South America, the name appeared in the church records of Danzig, Heubuden, Elbing, Orloff, Schönsee, and other places. A. A. Toews gives biographies of Martin J. Derksen (I, 144) and Johann J. Dürksen (II, 185). Jacob Doerksen was elder of the M.B. church at Kotlyarevo, Memrik, Crimea, 1909-26. In 1958 there were 15 Mennonite ministers listed bearing some form of the name. The M.B. group had 8, all in Canada, two each in British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, and Ontario; the G.C.M. had 7, of whom one was in British Columbia, one in Paraguay, and 5 in the United States, only two of whom were active (Neb. and S.D.). Martin Duerksen was pastor of the Buenos Aires (Argentina) congregation, and John P. Duerksen was professor at Hesston College. C.K.

Reimer, Familiennamen, 106; A. A. Töws, Menno-nitische Märtyrer (N. Clearbrook, I 1949, II 1954).

East Africa Mennonite Mission (MC), formerly called Africa Mennonite Mission (q.v.), in 1958 had 40 long-term workers, and six short-term workers, with a total African membership of 1,632. It was under the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities. H.S.B.

Merle Eshleman, Africa Answers (Scottsdale, 1951); Catharine Leatherman, Ye Are God's Building; The Story of Twenty-Five Years in Tanganyika (Salunga, Pa., 1959).

East Fairview Mennonite Church (MC), located 7 miles southeast of Lebanon, Ore., developed as an outreach project of the Fairview Mennonite Church (q.v.). The meetinghouse was built in 1949, but the congregation was not organized until May 1957. In 1959 the membership was 30, with Ivan Headings as pastor. H.S.B.

East Pennsylvania Conference of the Mennonite Church (GCM), the name adopted by the J. H. Oberholtzer (q.v.) group which was expelled from the Franconia Conference (q.v.) in October 1847, which was later changed to Eastern Mennonite Conference and finally to Eastern District Conference (q.v.). H.S.B.

Edmonton (Alberta) First Mennonite Church (GCM) began c1949 as a mission, and was organized as a congregation April 19, 1959, with 24 charter members. A church building was purchased in 1954. Arthur Dick has been pastor since 1958. H.S.B.

Educational News Bulletin has been published occasionally since 1950 by the Board of Education and Publication of the General Conference Mennonite Church to promote the cause of Christian education. Its eleven issues (1958) have been circulated among the ministers and church workers. M.H.

Ehrenpreis, Peter, of Illingen, Württemberg, son of the former Schultheiss Wolf Ehrenpreis, was won for Anabaptism c1583, went to Moravia when he was baptized, returned, relapsed for a time, then returned to his faith, and finally moved with his family to Moravia in 1596. His unusually fine life and spirit made a powerful impression upon the community. The Illingen pastor Huttenloch reported in 1596 to the Abbot of Maulbronn that "he is held in higher favor by a large part of the community than all the evangelical preachers." "Like all Anabaptists he leads a quiet, honorable, and blameless life." A certain George Augsburg is reported to have said, "If any man is saved, he will be. And I could wish no better heaven than the one Peter will be in." (TA Württemberg, passim.)

H.S.B.

Einlage was a Mennonite village established by Dutch Mennonites during the 17th century on the Nogat River in the Marienburg Werder. The name was also used in Chortitza (Russia), Manitoba, Mexico, and Paraguay. C.K.

Eirene (Greek word for "Peace"), the name of the service program for European conscientious objectors, similar to Pax (q.v.) for United States CO's, which was set up in 1957 by joint action of the Mennonite Central Committee and the Brethren Service Committee. Its first project is a unit located at Oulmes, Morocco, which is to work for local agricultural improvement. The administrative office is handled by the MCC at Kaiserslautern, Germany. The first unit consisted of five men—two French, two Dutch, and one American. H.S.B.

El Ombu (Uruguay) Mennonite Brethren Church was organized in 1948 in the newly established El Ombu settlement, composed largely of former Polish Mennonite Brethren. Its meetinghouse was built in 1955. In 1957 it had a membership of 84, with Tobias Foth as leader. It has two substations, one in Colonia meeting in a home (Robert Foth, leader) and the Montevideo Mission Home at Calle Pedro F. Berro 1114 (John Wall, missionary, leader). H.S.B.

Elkhart (Ind.) Mennonite Church (GCM) began holding services in January 1958 and was organized as a congregation with 40 charter members on Aug. 31, 1958. In April 1959 Walter Gering began to serve as pastor. Since its inception the congregation has met in the West Side School but in July 1959 a 4-acre plot with parsonage located at the corner of Hively and Pleasant Plain was purchased on which a meetinghouse will be built. W.K.L.

Emergency Relief Commission: see Emergency Relief Board.

England (II, 220): Supplement. The Mennonite Central Committee, at the urging of Canadian Mennonites, began a modest relief program in England in May 1940, with Theodore Claassen of Newton, Kan., joined by John E. Coffman in Oct., 1940. The various projects, which were developed, were not for emergency relief needs, but planned as a service to needs aggravated by the war, combined with an evangelical peace witness. These projects included: Polish Boys Project in London, aid to Cotswold Bruderhof (Hutterite), Wickhurst Manor (Save the Children Fund), Woodlands (Old People's Home near Birmingham), South Meadows (children's hostel near Liverpool), Taxal Edge (boys home), prisoner of war work, clothing distribution. It was John Coffman who first proposed in 1941 the motto "In the name of Christ," which was adopted by the MCC as a label for all future clothing and food packages. Among the 24 workers who served in England were Peter J. Dyck (July 1941-July 1945) and Mrs. Peter Dyck (1941-45). For the work in London see the article London: Supplement. The MCC work in England was closed in 1946, when the opportunity for more urgently needed relief work in Holland opened up, though one worker continued in prisoner of war work until the close of his term in 1947.

In 1952 the Mennonite Church (MC) began mission work in London, and in 1958 had two centers, the one at Free Gospel Hall with 10 members. (See London.) (J. D. Unruh, In the Name of Christ, Scottdale, 1952.) H.S.B.

England Mennonite Mission (MC), founded by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities in 1952, operates the London Mennonite Centre at 14 Shepherd's Hill, and the Free Gospel Hall at 39 Grafton Terrace in London, which had 10 members in 1958. H.S.B.

Englewood Mennonite Church, 832 West 68th Street, Chicago, Ill., is made up of a majority of the congregation formerly known as the Mennonite Home Mission (q.v.), established in 1893, and since 1955 called the Union Avenue Mennonite Church. The congregation purchased a church in Englewood where they opened services in October 1957, with a charter membership of 60 which was established in 1958, with Laurence M. Horst as pastor. The main body of the church moved to Englewood, but some of the members remained at the Union Avenue church to help administrate the continuing and growing Sunday school, under the administration of Laurence Horst. H.S.B.

Erie View United Mennonite Church (GCM), located 4 miles west of Port Rowan, Ont., was organized in 1947. The congregation bought an older church and remodeled it in 1957. In 1959 the membership was 37, with Jacob Braun as pastor. H.S.B.

Escola Fritz Kliever, a new Mennonite high school in Witmarsum, Brazil, was dedicated March 22, 1959. The school has accommodations for 113 students and 7 teachers and is supported by a constituency of 528 persons. G. E. Reimer is principal of the school. M.G.

Ethics. It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of ethics in the life and testimony of the Anabaptist-Mennonites. Throughout their history, Mennonites have sought above all to be holy, pure, and obedient to Christ. Consequently Mennonite preaching, writing, and piety have had a strong ethical emphasis. In fact, the ethical emphasis is so predominant in the writings of Menno Simons and others, that one is sometimes tempted to say that for Mennonites Christianity and ethics are one. At least it is fair to say that Mennonites have given ethics a position of centrality not generally found in Protestantism. Whereas Protestantism has had the tendency to separate faith from conduct in theology and in life as a protection against a religion of works, Anabaptists and Mennonites have held them closely together. It is probably premature to say what are the soteriological implications of the position given ethics by Mennonites. Suffice it to say, the statement of James that "faith without works is dead" represents a concern of Mennonites out of all proportion to a concern for the dangers of a religion of works.

The importance of the ethical life for the Mennonite understanding of Christianity appears in connection with the Anabaptist conception of discipleship. In his "Anabaptist Vision," H. S. Bender declares that for the Anabaptists discipleship was the essence of Christianity. "First and fundamental in the Anabaptist vision was the conception of the essence of Christianity as discipleship." By discipleship the Anabaptists meant the ethical life of radical obedience. "Discipleship" was a concept which meant "the transformation of the entire way of life of the individual believer and of society so that it should be fashioned after the teachings and example of Christ." Further examination of the Anabaptist vision with its almost exclusive preoccupation with ethics, notably nonresistance, nonswearing of oaths, a new concept of the church, and nonconformity to this world, would reinforce the conclusion that discipleship means a conception of Christianity in which "the Christian life is defined most basically in ethical terms."

The full significance of this understanding of Christianity is realized when it is compared with the Protestant Reformation in general. Whereas the Reformation was interested mainly in a reinterpretation of the way of salvation and consequently focused upon the subjective experience of grace and the inner enjoyment of the freedom of the Spirit, Anabaptism concentrated on the objective, concrete, outward manifestations of the Spirit. "The great word of the Anabaptists was not 'faith' as it was with the reformers, but 'following' (Nachfolge Christi)" (Bender). Noteworthy is the fact that Anabaptism had little to say about the great questions of faith in relation to divine acceptance. The question of the Anabaptists was, "What does it mean to follow Christ as a disciple?" Hence ethics was central in emphasis and inseparably tied to faith.

In view of the consuming desire of Anabaptists and Mennonites to live ethically it may seem strange that no American has written to date a Mennonite ethic as a theological discipline, although this has been done by the Dutch theologians de Bussy and Hoekstra, although not in the Anabaptist spirit. Numerous tracts, letters, monographs, and articles have been written on specific subjects such as nonresistance, separation, the oath, community, mutual aid, business, marriage, dress, and stewardship. However, no one has attempted to treat ethics systematically as a separate theological discipline. Possibly the principal reasons for this omission are the same as those which account for the paucity of theological literature among the Mennonites in general. Mennonitism has fostered a simple piety and a theological naïvete which has, to be sure, penetrated at times to the heart of the Gospel but which for that very reason is incapable of theological sophistication. More directly, the very simplicity of the Mennonite approach to ethics has tended to obviate a study of the methodology of ethics. In the absence of an explicit Mennonite ethic it is necessary therefore to generalize from numerous writings over a period of four hundred years and draw conclusions from approved Mennonite practice. It should be noted, however, that Guy F. Herschberger's War, Peace, and Nonresistance (1944) has served the Mennonite church in recent years virtually as a volume on Christian ethics despite its limited scope. Furthermore his book, The Way of the Cross in Human Relations (1958), comes even closer to meeting the need for a Mennonite ethic. Still to come, however, is a volume which seeks to set forth answers to the problems of basic Christian ethics.

Methodologically Mennonite ethics must be understood first and fundamentally as Biblical ethics. The exclusive source of ethical instruction is the Bible—more precisely the New Testament. The Biblicism of the Mennonites comes through most impressively in the settling of ethical questions. Sufficient for a valid imperative is a clearly stated command of Christ to His disciples or a command by one of the apostles. The norms of Mennonite ethics are simply the life and teachings of Christ as contained in the New Testament. Christ's earthly life has been regarded as a pattern to be followed in filial obedience. Generally speaking, Mennonite ethics belongs to the imitatio Christi tradition.

Nowhere does the imitation of Christ motif come through more clearly than in the Schleithem Confession (1527) (see Brüderliche Vereinigung). Here the only criterion of valid instruction regarding specific ethical questions is the earthly life of Christ, His teaching, or a testimony to the life of Christ from an apostle. Concerning the sword, for example, the answer is clear and summary: "Christ teaches and commands us to learn of Him, for He is meek and lowly in heart and so shall we find rest to our souls." Concerning whether a Christian should pass sentence in worldly disputes and strife the answer is, "Christ did not wish to decide or pass judgment between brother and brother in the case of the inheritance, but refused to do so. Therefore we should do likewise. They wished to make Christ King, but He fled and did not view it as an arrangement of His Father. Thus shall we do as He did, and follow Him, and so shall we not walk in darkness. For He Himself says: He who wishes to come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me."

Of course it must be conceded that all systems of ethics which deserve the name Christian take Christ and His teachings seriously. But the really significant factor which distinguishes one system from the other is how the teachings of Christ are used and what is put alongside the example and teachings of Christ within the system. Very seldom do we have a system of ethics which rests on Christ's teachings alone. Even those systems which claim to rely exclusively on the revelation in Christ are very likely to inject historical or philosophical considerations unwittingly. At least it may be said that all ethical systems which take seriously the life of the world and suppose that Christians are responsible for the social and political order inject on the ground floor of ethics certain norms outside the New Testament. The conflict between the perfectionism of Christ's ethic and the ambiguity of the world order makes some concession to a lower ethic necessary. Accordingly, Catholicism has drawn from natural law in Stoicism; Lutheranism has met the problem by the theory of the two realms; Calvinism has lowered the requirement of love to conform to the theocratic ideal of the Old Testament; modern theologians have entered considerations of historical relativism, contextualism, or anti-rationalistic existentialism. The uniqueness of Anabaptist ethics lies in the fact that it accepts the New Testament as the sole norm, assuming that the ethic of discipleship in the New Testament is essentially uniform and that it is a historical necessity and possibility for the church.

It should be remembered, however, that the Mennonite approach to ethics, namely, Biblical command and direct obedience, takes place within the church, the body of Christ, and under the direction of the Holy Spirit. This helps to qualify the legalistic tendencies within Mennonite ethics and to prevent it from becoming nothing more than a detached rationalistic systematization of Jesus' teachings. There is a sense in which the Anabaptists not only imitated Christ but participated in Christ as a living present reality. To be sure, the indwelling Spirit of Christ was not intended to provide an elasticity not permitted by the Biblical injunction. However, it did provide a spiritual context in which the Biblical text came alive in ways not true of later generations of Mennonites, who often succumbed to the spirit of legalism. Also it should be remembered that there has always been a certain child-like naïvete in Mennonite ethical thinking which, having precluded excessive rationalization of Jesus' teachings, has saved them from the despair of Tolstoy and of certain liberals by whom Jesus' teachings were considered a universal possibility.

In this connection it should be pointed out that, according to Mennonite thinking, Christian ethics is expected only of committed Christians. This may seem self-evident. On the contrary, the history of Christendom presents many occasions when Christian ethics have been adapted to the practical possibilities of total populations and were at times for that reason virtually equated with civic morality. But for Mennonites, Christian conduct issues from a vital experience of faith. In fact, it is only on the basis of complete commitment that the radical demands of discipleship are meaningful. Hence Christian ethics are really church ethics when viewed from the standpoint of the ethical agent as well as the context of decision-making.

Basic to the Mennonite ethics is the idea of the church as separated from the world. The dualism of the church and the world provides the comprehensive framework for the Mennonite outlook on duty. The church is defined as the "people of God" (I Peter 2:9) corresponding to the new age, described otherwise in the New Testament as the kingdom of God. Christ lives among the people of God and calls them away from evil in its many forms. The world is defined as the rule of evil. The world takes many social forms and is ever at war with the church. Therefore the church seeks to be nonconformed to the world by living according to the principles of the kingdom of God. According to Schleithem, "All creatures are in but two classes, good and bad, believing and unbelieving, darkness and light, the world and those who have come out of the world, God's temple and idols, Christ and Belial; and none can have part with the other."

One of the perennial problems of Mennonite ethics is to know where to draw the line between the church and the world. In the realm of theology the line is drawn quite clearly. The reality of God and His work of salvation, including the history of Israel and the true church together with appropriate attitudes and deeds of love, forgiveness, tenderness, and faith, constitute one realm. Satan and his work of opposition, including all evil men, angels, and institutions, constitute the other realm. But in the cultural situation where the church and the world are mixed, it is not always easy to know where to assign certain aspects of cultural life. Hence Mennonites have always been confronted with the task of passing ethical judgment on every major cultural change. Sometimes this has led Mennonites to freeze certain approved cultural patterns and to be suspicious of change in general. On the other hand, sometimes the church has been tempted to discard the task of cultural criticism. The dynamic character of modern change has accentuated the problem of change and consequently certain Mennonites have come to the conviction that the uniqueness of the Mennonite witness in the modern period is at stake.

The central idea of the Christian ethic according to Mennonites is love. Christ not only commanded love (Luke 10:27), but His life and death on the cross gave love concrete meaning. In the cross of Christ the love of God was manifested for the world and the love which is expected of Christians ethically is a re-enactment of the drama of redemption. In other words, the emphasis is on sacrificial love even though Mennonites use the term love to cover relationships of mutuality. Mennonites have clearly perceived that the full meaning of love is known supremely in the cross and the Christian ethic therefore must start with nothing less than complete self-giving.

One of the implications of the love ethic is nonresistance. For over four hundred years Mennonites have accepted nonresistance as the way in which Christians respond to evil. As an absolute principle, nonresistance has had a profound effect on all aspects of Mennonite life, psychological, economic, and political. Belief in nonresistance has expressed itself in conscientious objection to war. Also Mennonites have refused to be drawn into industrial conflict. Furthermore Mennonites have by and large refused active participation in politics. On the personal level, they have interpreted the principle of nonresistance to forbid litigation and, what is more important, they have interpreted it to imply the way of suffering love in cases of personal disputes and misunderstandings. But nonresistance has been regarded not simply as a negative principle. It has been an expression of outgoing redemptive love which looks to healing and reconciliation. For this reason Mennonites have sought to find alternative ways of service during times of war and attempts have been made to find creative alternatives to industrial strife and litigation.

Mennonites have always recognized that nonresistance means suffering and so from the very beginning Christianity and suffering have been linked together. "Living under the cross" has been considered normal Christian experience. Anyone acquainted with Mennonite literature knows that many of the finest and most expressive tracts, hymns, and historical accounts uphold the inevitability of suffering and also the necessity of suffering as a direct implication of true discipleship. As a result of the prolonged intensity of suffering the result has sometimes been a psychology of suffering and frequently suffering has fostered a general attitude of retirement and quietism.

Another implication of the love ethic is brotherhood. This is the form which love takes among those who have been reconciled to God and to one another. Brotherhood love expresses itself in a sense of mutual responsibility for the total welfare of the members of the church. The brotherhood church as the body of Christ is held together by common commitment to meet one another's needs in the spiritual, moral, and material realms. Some of the finest moments of Mennonite life are moments of sharing, especially in times of emergency. Since much of Mennonite history has been a history of persecution, brotherhood mutuality has often constituted the difference between life and death. Sharing has been practiced not only within various congregations but between churches in various countries. During the modern period permanent organizations have taken up the task of mutual aid as the needs have become more numerous and complex.

The principle of brotherhood is also important for ethics in so far as brotherhood has affected the entire community life of Mennonites. Mennonites have traditionally sought to live near to one another, often in semi- or complete isolation from the main centers of population. Accordingly the brotherhood church and the community have frequently been described as one reality. The church, family, farm, school, and business have constituted what may be called "religious community." A deliberate effort has been made within the Mennonite communities to inject the ethic of love into all areas of life. Sometimes the community life of Mennonites has been more instinctive than deliberate. Nevertheless Mennonites have always sought to live together in such a way that the principles of brotherhood may be extended into the social realm.

The form which community life has taken among Mennonites has varied greatly. Its most extreme expression has been Christian communalism. Most notable is Hutterianism with its practice of "full community." Among the Hutterites (q.v.) Christian mutuality is understood to mean the abolition of private property. It means also group authority over areas of life normally thought to lie within the province of the individual. Within the Bruderhofs every aspect of life is directed toward brotherhood, including the family and economics. The significance of the Bruderhof lies in the fact that it lifts sharing above an occasional response to specific needs. The Bruderhof involves nothing less than a structure of mutuality. Sharing is a continuous and all-embracing experience.

Among most Anabaptist and Mennonite groups brotherhood has not been organized as systematically as among the Hutterites. In the "open communities" of American Mennonites brotherhood responsibilities have been less pervasive and comprehensive. Most Mennonite groups have made a larger place for self-determination. It is customary for individuals to make their own decisions with respect to marriage, vocation, education, and mobility, subject of course to accepted moral standards, and usually subject to the restriction of no marriage outside the church, and no business and social affiliations which would violate the "unequal yoke" proscription of II Cor. 6.

Having said this, however, it is important to remember that the brotherhood has fostered many traditions and cultural expressions which have had powerful ethical influences. The Mennonite community has been guided to a considerable extent by traditional attitudes and practices, often in the absence of a reasoned and articulate ethic. Ethical decisions have been made by Mennonites largely from the standpoint of what the church has approved in the past. At any rate, Mennonite ethics have been mainly community ethics rising out of a deep sense of belonging to a common life.

A discussion of Mennonite ethics would not be complete without a statement regarding the Mennonite attitude toward the total social order, especially from the standpoint of social justice. With respect to the concern for social justice Mennonites have not entered into this realm except in a few instances, whether as individual participation or as a church. It is true that the early Anabaptists spoke out against religious persecution and the early Pennsylvania Quakers of German Mennonite background (not Mennonites as once thought) were among the first in America to protest against slavery, but as a rule Mennonites have not addressed themselves to the great social and political problems of society. Their reluctance to become involved in the struggle for justice has a number of roots. Certainly one is nonresistance, which when applied to the realm of social change runs counter to the inevitable coercive balances of power and counter to the spirit of the world. The Christian's calling lies primarily in the work of the church and the Christian community rather than in the work of the world. The Christian must be concerned with the realm of redemption with consequent attitudes of minor concern for the world order. The Mennonite concept of "the church leads the Christian to withdraw his major energies from active participation in the general program of world betterment and attempted reconstruction of the entire non-Christian world order and focus them on the building of the Christian community. His hope for the world is the church and the creation of a Christian social order within the fellowship of the church brotherhood" (Bender).

The withdrawal of the Mennonite church from the realms of justice and law does not mean, however, that Mennonites have had no social outreach. The truth is that Mennonites have supported an outstanding program of social service in the form of relief and voluntary service in almost every nation of the world during the past forty years. In fact, Mennonites are among the most active in this area. Undoubtedly the present program of world relief and voluntary service has received much of its stimulus from a search for a moral alternative to military service. However, this is not the only reason. The basic reason is that Mennonites have rediscovered the service motive in discipleship at a time when the world has undergone two major wars and a number of major social revolutions.

One of the consequences of Mennonite involvement in world relief and rehabilitation is a growing interest in the world and its problems from a Christian point of view. This has raised the question of whether Mennonites should not become more active in shaping social and political policy. This is another way of asking whether and in what way Mennonites can witness to government and lesser social powers without forfeiting the position of nonresistance and the primacy of the church in the life of the Christian. Undoubtedly this question has far-reaching consequences for Mennonite ethics.

The problem of social witness and action should also be seen in connection with the rapid assimilation of American Mennonites in the economic and social life of the nation. Especially since World War II, the Mennonite community has lost much of its agrarian isolation, through the forces of urbanization and mass communication. This constitutes nothing less than a crisis in Mennonite ethics, since Mennonite ethical thinking has largely assumed a more or less controlled community. Today the environment of American Mennonitism is secular America. Having lost much of its sociological base, Mennonitism is faced with the question of how to work out a community ethic in a secular environment. Undoubtedly this question calls for a new sense of realism among Mennonites and a critical analysis of such basic ethical concepts as love, justice, and power.

Preoccupation with the categories of social ethics should not lead to forgetting that Mennonites have traditionally held to strict standards of personal morality, such as sexual purity, honesty, Christian attire, and Christian entertainment. Drinking, smoking, and attendance at questionable places of amusement have been discouraged. Instead, Mennonites have been encouraged to live a simple and modest life of godliness. One of the finest treatments of Mennonite ethics, particularly from the standpoint of personal morality, is John C. Wenger's, Separated unto God. In this volume, the nonconformed life is described in its manifold relations to the forces of good and evil in society.

In the course of their 400-year history, scattered as they have been by migration from western Europe to Russia, and to North America and South America, and varying in type from urban (in Holland and Northwest Germany) to exclusively rural (Russia, South America, and until recently the United States and Canada), Mennonites have not always maintained a uniform ethical pattern. Particularly in western Europe has there been some deviation from the above outline. This sketch applies most accurately therefore to the Mennonites of the United States and Canada. No attempt has been made to review the history of ethical theory as developed among the Mennonites of Holland by such men as Hoekstra and de Bussy; nor to trace ethical developments in that country. J.L.B.

H. S. Bender, "The Anabaptist Vision," MQR XVIII (1944) 78 f.; ibid., John Howard Yoder, "The Anabaptist Dissent," Concern, No. 1 (June 1954) 45; Guy F. Hersherberger, War, Peace, and Nonresistance (Scottsdale, 1944); idem, The Way of the Cross in Human Relations (Scottsdale, 1958); John C. Wenger, "The Schleithem Confession of Faith," MQR XIX (1954) 250-51; H. S. Bender, "The Mennonite Conception of the Church and Its Relation to Community Building," MQR XIX (April 1945) 99; H. S. Bender, "Church and State in Mennonite History," MQR XIII (1939) 83-103; I. J. L. C. de Bussy, Ethisch Idealisme (Amsterdam, 1875); S. Hoekstra, Zedenleer, 3 vols. (Amsterdam, 1894); The Complete Writings of Menno Simons 1496-1561 (Scottsdale, 1956); H. S. Bender, Conrad Grebel 1498-1521, the Founder of the Swiss Brethren Sometimes Called Anabaptists (Scottsdale, 1950); S. Hoekstra, Beginnelsen en Leer der Oude Doopsgezinden vergeleken met die van de overige Protestanten (Amsterdam, 1863); Cornelius Krahn, Menno Simons (1496-1561). Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte und Theologie der Taufgesinnten (Karlsruhe, 1936); Robert Kreider, "Anabaptism and Humanism," MQR XXI (1952) 129-41; Maynard Shelly, ed., Studies in Church Discipline (Newton, 1958); Ulrich Bergfried, Verantwortung als theologisches Problem im Taufertum des 16. Jahrhunderts (Wuppertal, 1938); J. Winfield Fretz, "Mennonite Mutual Aid, A Contribution to the Development of Christian Community" (unpublished Ph.D. thesis, University of Chicago, 1941); C. Krahn, J. W. Fretz, and R. S. Kreider, "Altruism in Mennonite Life," in P. Sorokin's Forms and Techniques of Altruistic and Spiritual Growth (Boston, 1954); J. W. Nickel, "An Analytical Approach to Mennonite Ethics" (unpublished Th.D. dissertation, Iliff School of Theology at Denver, 1959); A. P. Toews, "The Problem of Mennonite Ethics" (unpublished Th.D. dissertation, Concordia Theological Seminary, St. Louis, Mo.); ML I, 612 f.

Ethiopia Mennonite Mission (MC), founded by the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities in 1948, had five stations in 1958, at Addis Ababa, Nazareth, Deder, Bedeno, and Dire Dawa, with 35 missionaries and some 150 members. H.S.B.

Eureka Gardens Mennonite Church (MC), 3406 University Ave., Wichita, Kan., is a mission sponsored by the mission board of the South Central Conference, established in 1947. In 1958 it had 19 members, with Leo J. Miller as pastor. H.S.B.

Eureka Mennonite Church (MC), Washington, Iowa, was organized in 1958 with 35 charter members. Vernon Roth is its pastor. The congregation purchased an abandoned church a few miles south of the city for its meetinghouse. M.G.

Euro Pax News, an illustrated four-page quarterly, published by the European Pax Office of Mennonite Central Committee at Frankfurt, Germany, appeared first in September 1954. While it deals primarily with MCC Pax activities in Europe, it includes occasional news about Pax units in the Middle East and North Africa. The editors have been Robert Schrag 1954-56, Arlo Kasper 1956-57, James Eigsti 1958, Gerald Bender 1958-. The page size was changed from 12 x 9 inches to approximately 13½ x 9½ inches with the November 1958 issue. N.P.S.

Evangelical Association, an American denomination founded in 1800 in eastern Pennsylvania by Jacob Albright (hence often called in German "Albrechtsleute"), a Methodist lay preacher, who wished to reach his German brethren with the Methodist message, and because the Methodist church refused to work among the Germans, felt constrained to start a new group. The name Evangelical Association was adopted at the first general conference of the group in 1816. A secession in 1891 led to the formation of the United Evangelical Church, which was reunited in the parent body in 1922 under the name Evangelical Church. In 1946 this body (215,000 members) was merged with the United Brethren Church (q.v.) to form the Evangelical United Brethren Church. In earlier days a number of Mennonites joined the Evangelical Association both in eastern Pennsylvania and elsewhere. The branch of the Evangelical Association established in Germany in 1865 (first mission work in Germany in 1850) is called the Evangelische Gemeinschaft. The Evangelical Synod, which merged with the Reformed Church in 1934 to form the Evangelical and Reformed Church, was a different church, founded in 1840 in St. Louis and is not to be confused with the Evangelical Church (Association). H.S.B.

Evangelische Mennonitische Glaubensgemeinschaft, Buenos Aires, Argentina, is the official name of the Buenos Aires Russian Mennonite Church (q.v.). In 1958 it had 65 members, Marten Duerksen pastor.

Eventide Home, Mountain Lake, Minn., was founded in 1921, when a former hospital building was taken over as an inter-Mennonite Home for the Aged. The new building, called Eventide Home, was erected in 1950, with a 54-bed capacity. It is a nursing home as well as a boarding care home. Superintendents have been Margaret Friesen, Margaret Janzen, Katharina Balzer, Susie Ewert, Anna Wall, and Mrs. Anna Isaac, who has been serving since 1950. The home is operated by a board of seven directors elected annually by the shareholders. H.S.B.

Evergreen Church of God in Christ Mennonite Church, Scio, Ore., is located 2½ miles southwest of Stayton. In 1958 it had 19 members. It was listed first in the Yearbook (CGC) for 1958. M.G.

Ewert, Benjamin (1870-1958), minister-at-large of General Conference Mennonite Church, was born Nov. 26, 1870, at Thorn, West Prussia, Germany, the youngest of the twelve children of Wilhelm and Anna Janz Ewert, and a brother to H. H. Ewert (q.v.). The family immigrated to America in 1874 and settled on a farm near Hillsboro, Kan. He was educated at the Mennonite Seminary at Halstead, Kan., 1884-90, and the Mennonite Educational Institute, Gretna, Man., 1892-1902. He was baptized in the Halstead Mennonite Church on Jan. 6, 1889, and later joined the Bruderthal Church at Hillsboro.

He farmed 1890-92, then taught a country school near Gretna for 10 years. He also taught one year in the Mennonite Educational Institute at Gretna. He married Emilie A. Ruth of Halstead on Oct. 29, 1895, to whom were born two daughters and two sons. He was ordained to the ministry in the Bergthal Mennonite Church in Manitoba in 1895, serving for 25 years, and then became itinerant minister of the General Conference of the Mennonites of Canada for 17 years until 1938. He had a bookstore and printing plant in Gretna for 15 years, printing Der Mitarbeiter, the paper of the Gretna school, pamphlets, etc. He was superintendent of the Bergthal Mennonite Old Folk's Home in Gretna 1919-21. He organized churches in Saskatchewan, officiating with baptismal services, Lord's Supper, election and ordination of ministers, and other services. He opened the Bethel Mennonite Mission (GCM) at Winnipeg in 1938 and supervised it until August 1943, and continued as associate minister until his death. He served as minister-at-large for the Canadian Mennonite Conference, and as statistician for conference committees. He was chairman, vice-chairman, and secretary of the conference as well as a member of numerous committees, and served on the boards of the Bible Society, the Temperance Alliance, and the Board of Education. In 1917, during World War I, he was one of five delegates sent to Ottawa by the Mennonite churches of Western Canada to consult with government officials regarding military service by Mennonite youth. He was president of the Canadian Mennonite Gesangbuch-Commission. He died June 22, 1958, at Winnipeg. J.H.L.A.

Extinct Mennonite Churches in North America. The limited studies made show that a large number of Mennonite congregations in various conference groups in the United States and Canada have become extinct during the 19th and 20th centuries. Gordon Dyck's study reveals at least 90 such extinct G.C.M. congregations in its hundred years of history, 1847-1959. L. J. Burkholder reports at least 25 for the M.C. group in Ontario. Other M.C. conference histories report like figures (e.g., Wenger's for Franconia, Weber's for Illinois, Wenger's for Indiana-Michigan). It is possible that the M.C. has suffered at least 200 extinct congregations, the G.C.M. 100, the M.B. 50, the remaining groups another 50, making a total of at least 400 organized congregations that have died out.

The reasons for the extinction of these congregations have been varied. Some were poorly conceived colonization attempts on poor land or with few economic possibilities. Some never were large enough to support a healthy economic life or too far from sister congregations to furnish adequate social privileges for the youth, who married "out" and joined other churches. Economic depressions, droughts, crop failures contributed their share of congregational failures. Often poor ministerial leadership was the cause, or factionalism and disunity. Refusal to give up the German language or to adopt new methods of church work, such as the Sunday school, and persistence in traditionalism, closed more than one Mennonite church in the face of aggressive competition from more spiritually alive churches of other denominations. The majority of the extinct churches had a brief life span of not more than a generation, but others died out after 50-100 years of existence. A few were rightfully merged with near-by congregations. H.S.B.

Gordon R. Dyck, "The United States General Conference Extinct Churches (1847-1959)," manuscript in GCL (1959); John Umble, "Extinct Ohio Mennonite Churches," MQR XVIII-XX (1944-46); L. J. Burkholder, History of the Mennonites of Ontario (Toronto, 1937).

Eyebrow First Mennonite Church (CGM): see Eyebrow-Tugaske Mennonite Church.

Fairholme (Sask.) Evangelical Mennonite Brethren Church was established c1930 and was organized under the leadership of John Klassen. The church declined in membership when members moved back south to the prairies and others left to join a Holiness group. It had a peak membership of about 50 but with the loss of members the church organization ceased to function. However, mission work is still being carried on in the Fairholme district by the Scripture Mission, a mission of the Evangelical Mennonite Brethren Church, for rural areas. With perhaps only 5 members in the area in 1959, the church no longer holds regular services. W.J.P.E.

Faith and Life Press is one of the publishing names of the General Conference Mennonite Church. This name was approved by the Executive Committee in 1955 and was first used on The Youth Hymnary published in 1956. Other publication names in use are: Mennonite Publication Office, and Board of Education and Publication. Publication work is the responsibility of the Mennonite Publication Office (q.v.), an agency of the General Conference's Board of Education and Publication. M.SH.

Faith Church of God in Christ Mennonite Church, at Iroquois, S.D., organized in 1950, dedicated its newly erected meetinghouse May 17, 1959. It had 38 members, with Harvey Yost as pastor. The first farm in the community to be purchased by a member of the congregation was bought in 1949. H.S.B.

Farmerstown Mennonite Church (MC), located 4 miles northeast of Baltic, Ohio, a member of the Ohio and Eastern Conference, was organized in 1950, after having been a mission outpost of the Walnut Creek (q.v.) congregation since 1936. Its meetinghouse was purchased from the Methodists. In 1958 the membership was 87, with Homer Kandel as pastor. H.S.B.

Fedde Bindertsdochter, an Anabaptist martyr, arrested at the recapture of the Oldeklooster (q.v.), was drowned at Leeuwarden, capital of Friesland, on April 14, 1535. (Vos, Menno Simons, 229.)

vdZ.

Feitema (Feytama), a former Dutch Mennonite family, from the 16th century found at Harlingen in Friesland, where Sibrand Ebes Feitema in the 17th century was the owner of a brickworks and other businesses. From the early 17th century this family was also found at Amsterdam, where they were outstanding businessmen and often deacons of the church. Jacob Yedes Feytama (d.1631) was a wealthy brewer here; his son Yede (Eduard) Feytama in 1616 married Elisabeth Willem-Gysbertsdochter, a sister of the Waterlander elder Reinier Wybrands Wybma (q.v.). Sybrand Feytama (Amsterdam, 1694-1758) was in his day a noted poet and playwright. vdZ.

De Vrije Fries XVII (Leeuwarden, 1920) 22-27; church records of Amsterdam; G. Kalff, Gesch. der Nederl. Letterkunde V (Groningen, 1910) 450 f., 513, 515, 575; Algemeen Doopsgez. Weekblad XI (1956) No. 34.

Felix, Hans: see Uhrmacher, Hans.

Fellowship Chapel, an E.M.B. Church, Chilliwack, B.C., was organized in 1957. Its church was built in 1958 when it had 8 members, with Lloyd Pankrat as pastor. H.S.B.

Filadelfia (Paraguay) Mennonite Brethren Church was established in 1930 in the newly located capital of Fernheim Colony, by M.B. refugee settlers from Russia. The meetinghouse was built in the town in 1952, and in 1950 a Bible School and Bible Institute were established in the church to serve the Paraguay M.B. group. The congregation, which had in 1957 a membership of 486, with Gerhard Balzer as leader, includes all of the Fernheim colony villages except the "Harbin corner," which has its own congregation (Orloff, q.v.). H.S.B.

Fire Insurance: see Insurance.

Flamersheim, in the duchy of Jülich, Germany, was one of the Mennonite congregations which signed the Concept (q.v.) of Cologne in 1591. Frans van Rijnbach signed in the name of Flamerse (Flamersheim). Nothing more is known about it. vdZ.

Flemming: see Vlaming.

Focke Ublezoon, an Anabaptist martyr, arrested at the recapture of the Oldeklooster (q.v.) and beheaded at Leeuwarden, capital of Friesland, on April 10, 1535. (Vos, Menno Simons, 228.) vdZ.

Foreign Missions: see Missions, Mennonite Foreign.

Fraktur (Fraktur): see Illuminated Manuscripts among the Pennsylvania Mennonites.

France Mennonite Mission (MC), founded by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities in 1953, in 1959 had one station in Paris (Butte Rouge) with four missionaries and nine members. H.S.B.

Frankfurt a. M. (II, 376): Supplement. On Aug. 27, 1527, Dionysius Melander, Evangelical pastor at Frankfurt (1525-35), reported to the city council that Anabaptists were selling books there. In a letter to Capito at Strasbourg in early 1528 Melander confirmed the presence of Anabaptists in the city. Hans Duck, an Anabaptist, was expelled from the city. On April 14, 1534, the Anabaptist Johann Mettlinger was threatened with expulsion. The Frankfurt book fair was for decades a favorite meeting place of Anabaptists from far and near. In 1544, for example, Endres Nef was sent from Cannstatt "to Frankfurt to the Anabaptists." About 1565 Guido de Brez, the noted Calvinist leader from the Southern Netherlands, claimed to have disputed with the Anabaptists at Frankfurt. (G. Hein, "Anabaptists in Frankfurt on the Main," MQR XXXIII, 1959, 69-72.) H.S.B.

Frans Metselair, an Anabaptist martyr, arrested at the recapture of the Oldeklooster (q.v.) and beheaded at Leeuwarden, capital of Friesland, on April 10, 1535. (Vos, Menno Simons, 228.) vdZ.

Fraserview Mennonite Brethren Church, located at 59th Avenue and Culloden, Vancouver, B.C., was established in 1954 from the Vancouver M.B. Church, when its meetinghouse was built. In 1957 it had 449 members, with P. R. Toews as pastor, assisted by David Vogt. H.S.B.

Fredonia (Kan.) First Mennonite Church (GCM) is located in the 100 block of North 14th Street. It was established as a fellowship in 1939 and organized as a congregation in 1947. Its membership in 1958 was 28, with Willard A. Schrag as minister. M.G.

Frell, Georg, a Swiss Anabaptist leader and bookseller at Chur, Grisons, in the second half of the 16th century. In the 1560's he was called to account by Reformed clergyman Johannes Fabricius (q.v.) for selling Anabaptist books. The affair caused a sharp debate among the authorities on the right of government to compel dissenters to accept doctrine contrary to their conscience. The dispute involved the Reformed leaders Egli, Gantner, and Bullinger. Frell is described as a "quiet, religiously thoughtful" man. Charged with both Anabaptist and Schwenckfeld heresy, he was expelled from Chur in 1570, but returned later and appeared there openly. Nothing is known concerning his later career. (For details on the dispute, see Chur and Grisons.) E.H.B.

Freyberg, Helene von (II, 307): Supplement. Additional light on this noblewoman is found in the Kunstbuch (q.v.), No. 28, folios 243-46, where her (undated) confession before the brotherhood in Strasbourg is given. It shows not only the remarkable level of her Christian experience but also the manner in which church discipline was exercised in the second generation Anabaptist congregation at Augsburg under the leadership of Valentine Werner and Pilgram Marpeck. Her transgression is never clearly defined, but apparently involved a business venture. She confessed that at the heart of her sin lay a rebellious attitude which had hitherto refused to accept the admonition and discipline of the brotherhood. She pleaded for the forgiveness of the church and in particular the leaders. A letter discovered by Loserth, written Jan. 6, 1534, by King Ferdinand of Austria at Prague, advises the authorities to compel her to make an open recantation, or at least a private one before the authorities, as an example to the public. (The letter indicates that the nobility were not as a rule forced to recant openly.) If she performed penance and took the sacrament, he would not oppose the return of her property. The above confession may be the one she wrote after her temporary recantation. The few available facts concerning her indicate that her influence was far-reaching. W.K.L.

Heinold Fast, "Pilgram Marbeck und das oberdeutsche Täuferum, ein neuer Handschriftenfund," ARG XLVII (1956) 212-42; Loserth, Anabaptismus, 586.

Friedenshort, the second of the three homes for the aged operated by the German Mennonite organization known as Mennonitische Heime, e.V. (q.v.), primarily for the care of aged Mennonite refugees from West Prussia. Founded in 1950 (not 1949 as in ME II, 222) through the leasing and renovation of a large building, it has a capacity of some 75. The home is self-supporting through a per capita per diem grant from the government, aided by MCC food contributions. H.S.B.

Friendship Mennonite Church (MC), located at 21881 Libby Road, Bedford Heights (Cleveland), Ohio, was begun in 1949 under the Ohio Mennonite Mission Board. It was organized as an independent congregation in 1957, when the meetinghouse was built. In 1958 the membership was 74, with Dale Nofziger as pastor. H.S.B.

Friesland (Paraguay) Mennonite Brethren Church was organized in 1937 when the group who left Fernheim Colony founded Friesland Colony. It built its meetinghouse in 1952 in Rückenau. It has 194 members, with Johann Goertzen as leader. Kornelius Voth was leader 1937-d. c1957. H.S.B.

Froschauer, Simprecht (d. c1536), a younger half brother of Christoph (q.v.), in whose Zürich print shop he worked, joined the Anabaptists and followed Hubmaier to Nikolsburg, where he became Hubmaier's printer from July 1526 to early 1528. Eighteen Hubmaier prints are known to have come from his press, signed "Simprecht Sorg genant Froschauer." Upon Hubmaier's arrest and execution in 1528 Simprecht fled to Liegnitz in Silesia, where he printed some Schwenckfeld booklets. H.S.B.

P. Leemen, Die Offizin Froschauer (Zürich, 1940) 14-16; ML II.

Furrow, a furrow plowed in the Kansas prairie in 1873 apparently beginning at the Henry Brunk farm approximately six miles west of Marion Centre (now Marion), Marion Co., Kan., and extending straight west on the present Highway 50 into McPherson County to a point near the home of Daniel Brundage (q.v.). This furrow has become legendary in the literature on the Kansas frontier, generally being referred to as the "23-mile furrow" although it was apparently only 14 miles long. Literary accounts credit various individuals for having plowed it, although the records seem to prove that either R. J. Heatwole (q.v.) or Daniel Brundage or both participated in this task. Heatwole in 1893 explained that the purpose of the furrow was to enable the scattered Mennonite settlers to "find our course along this furrow back and forth to worship together without losing the way along which there was nothing to break the monotony of the journey save the flocks of prairie chickens, and the small herds of antelopes cantering from us in the distance." (See also Kansas.) M.G.

Melvin Gingerich, "The Twenty-Three Mile Furrow," Mennonite Historical Bulletin, October 1949, 3-4; Menn. Life IV (July 1949) 6-7.

Futtur, a Mennonite village in Volhynia: see Zahoriz.

Garden Park Mennonite Brethren Church, located at 1720 South Alcott Street, Denver, Col., was organized in 1955, its meetinghouse built in 1957. In 1959 the membership was 90, with John J. Gerbrandt as pastor. H.S.B.

Gardental (Uruguay) Mennonite Brethren Church was organized in 1952. It used a remodeled (1956) meeting place. In 1957 the membership was 35, with Kornelius Funk as leader. H.S.B.

Geerdt Nannedochter and Geert Hansdochter, two Anabaptist martyrs, arrested at the recapture of the Oldeklooster (q.v.). Both women were drowned at Leeuwarden, capital of Friesland, on April 14, 1535. (Vos, Menno Simons, 229.) vDZ.

Gemeenschap van Dienende Arbeidsters was an organization of young Dutch Mennonite women, established at Elspeet on June 10, 1934, on the initiative of T. Best, who was the leader of the organization. The aim of the association was to give assistance in households in case of the illness of the housewife. In 1940 the organization was dissolved. (De G. D. A., n.p., n.d.—Borne, 1935.) vDZ.

Gemmelich, Ulrich: see Zaunmacher, Ulrich.

General Conference Central Office (GCM) is located in two adjacent buildings, 720 and 722 Main Street, Newton, Kan., sometimes referred to as General Conference Headquarters. Donated by Elva Krehbiel Leisy of Dallas, Tex., in memory of her parents, Henry P. and Matilda Kruse Krehbiel, the 722 building was dedicated as the Krehbiel Building and put into service on July 18, 1943, as the Central Office of the General Conference Mennonite Church. In 1954 Mrs. Leisy made the adjacent building available on an annuity agreement basis. The building was remodeled and enlarged in 1951, 1954, and 1957. In addition to offices for the Boards of the General Conference, the Central Office provides space for the Central Treasury, Young People's Union, Women's Missionary Association, Mennonite Publication Office and Bookstore, and the Western District Conference. The office is supervised by a manager appointed by the Executive Committee of the General Conference Mennonite Church. Persons who have served as managers are P. A. Penner 1943-46, Walter H. Dyck 1946-49, A. Theodore Mueller 1949-50, A. J. Richert 1952-58, William L. Friesen 1959. M.Sh.

General Council of the Mennonite General Conference (MC), established in 1951 as the interim representative body for the General Conference, is composed of the officers of the General Conference, and one representative appointed by each district conference, each general board of the church, and each General Conference standing committee, with a total of some 36 members. (See Mennonite General Conference.) H.S.B.

General Educational Council (MC) of the Mennonite Board of Education was established in 1949 as a counseling body for all the educational interests of the Mennonite Church (MC) except those purely of the local congregations. It consists of 12 members appointed annually by the Mennonite Board of Education. Under it and responsible to it are the following six councils: Seminary, Collegiate, Secondday School, Elementary School, Winter Bible School, and Nursing Education, whose members are also appointed by the Board. H.S.B.

General Villegas Mennonite Church (MC), Argentina, a member of the Argentine Conference, was established in 1941. In 1958 it had 19 members, with Lawrence Brunk as pastor. H.S.B.

Gesangh-boeck, Behelzende verscheide Gesangen, om op alle Feestdagen, en Voor als Na de Predicatie in de Vergaderinge te Singen, Nog Belydenisse des Geloofs, met de Voornaemste Zeden, Korte Wetten, Kerckelyke Ordre en discipline in de Christelycke Gemeente . . ., is a Dutch Mennonite hymnal (Haarlem, 1644). A second edition (2 vol., Hamburg, 1684, 1685) has the order of the hymns somewhat changed as well as the tunes. The Hamburg edition was printed on behalf of the Hamburg-Altona Flemish congregation. vDZ.

M. Schagen, Naamlijst der Doopsgez. schrijveren (Amsterdam, 1745); Blaupot t. C., Holland II, 212 f.

Gezangen ten gebruike in Doopsgezinde Gemeenten: see Leidsche Bundel.

Ghana Mennonite Church and Mission (MC), founded in 1956 by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities at Accra, in 1958 had 27 members in Accra and operated five substations with four missionaries. H.S.B.

Gilead Mennonite Church (MC), located 1½ miles northwest of Chesterville, Ohio, is a member of the Ohio and Eastern Conference. The first Mennonite settlers arrived in the community in 1950. Murray Krabill arrived in June 1951 to become the first pastor of the congregation, which was organized in 1952. A basement church was built in 1952; in 1959 the building was enlarged and completed. The congregation had a membership of 35 in 1958. M.K.R.

Glantzner: see Glanzer.

Glendive (Mont.) First Mennonite Church (GCM) had 52 members in 1957, with Randall Heinrichs as pastor. First listed as an organized congregation in the 1952 Handbook, its first Sunday morning worship was held on June 13, 1948. Its church was built in 1948-49. M.G.

Glenn (Cal.) Church of God in Christ Mennonite Church is located 10 miles east and 1 mile north of Willows. In 1958 it had 88 members, served by the ministers Jake H. Loewen and Dick C. Loewen. It was first listed in the Yearbook of 1953. M.G.

Glenwood Springs Mennonite Church (MC) is located in south Glenwood Springs, Col. The congregation was organized in March 1956 and the church built in 1957. The membership numbered 35 in 1959. Samuel Janzen was the pastor. M.G.

"Go Ye" Mission, Inc. (GCM), was started after World War II by S. Mouttet at Choteau, Okla. Since 1945 it has published the bimonthly paper "Go Ye" (q.v.), to report on its work. The work of the mission includes child evangelism as well as general evangelism. The mission reports unofficially to the Oklahoma Conference (q.v.). During the summer children's camps are conducted. The mission bookstore was started in 1948 at Muskogee, Okla. Grace Chapel in the Liberty community, Okla., was completed in 1958. The present leader of "Go Ye" Missions is Homer Mouttet. C.K.

Goethe, Wolfgang von: see article at end of Supplement.

Good Shepherd Mennonite Church, Rabanal, Cidra, Puerto Rico, was founded in 1947 as an outpost of the Calvary (q.v.) congregation. The first converts were baptized on March 27, 1949. The meetinghouse was erected on Oct. 3, 1948. In 1958 the congregation had 32 members, with Melquiades Santiago and Addona Nissley as ministers. (Gladys Widmer, We Enter Puerto Rico, Elkhart, 1952.) H.S.B.

Goodfield Mennonite Church (MC), a member of the Illinois Conference, now extinct, was an outgrowth of the remnant of the Mackinaw congregation after the Roanoke (q.v.) and Rock Creek congregations had been organized from the original settlement established in 1834. The first settlers in the direct Goodfield area arrived c1842, with many others arriving in 1852 and 1853, mostly coming from Ohio and Pennsylvania. Early settlers were families bearing the names Forney, Ropp, Reisser, Zehr, Yoder, Sommer, Ehrismann, Klopfenstein, and Schertz. The town of Goodfield was not created until 1888, but the congregation bearing this name was established c1872, when a group of members began to rent the former Rock Creek meetinghouse for services. A new meetinghouse, 28 x 38 ft., with a council room in the rear, 12 x 14 ft., was erected in 1883 one mile south of Goodfield. Ministers were shared with the Roanoke congregation at first, the early ones being Jacob Zehr and Christian Ropp bishops and Christian Risser preacher. Jacob Zehr served 1895-1929. The last ministers were Daniel Zehr and Harold Oyer. The membership was always small (50-65) and in 1941 the congregation was merged with Morton (q.v.). H.S.B.

Goshen College Mennonite Church (MC), Goshen, Ind., was organized Dec. 8, 1903, to meet the need of a congregation for the staff and students of Goshen College (q.v.), which opened its doors Sept. 29, 1903, following a transfer of the school from Elkhart, Ind. Since the members of the congregation came from congregations affiliated with both Indiana-Michigan conferences (MC and AM), the congregation belonged to both conferences and was served by bishops from both conferences until the merger in 1917. The first pastor was J. S. Hartzler, who was succeeded by I. W. Royer 1905-10. Other pastors were P. E. Whitmer, George J. Lapp, I. R. Detweiler, and A. E. Kreider, all serving on the college staff. The charter membership in 1903 was 57; by 1904 it was 129.

Because of the closing of the college in June 1923 and also because of internal friction within the conference, a large part of the congregation withdrew and joined the Eighth Street Mennonite Church (q.v., founded 1913, new meetinghouse built 1920) of the Central Conference (q.v.). I. R. Detweiler joined this church in 1923 and became its pastor. When the college reopened in September 1924, the bishop in charge reorganized the congregation with a new charter membership of 15, which reached 115 by 1925, 201 by 1935, 297 by 1945. Noah Oyer served as pastor 1924-d. 31, followed by C. L. Graber 1931-42, S. C. Yoder 1942-50, and John H. Mosemann 1950-. Bishops have been D. D. Miller 1903-42, S. C. Yoder 1942-56, and John H. Mosemann 1956-. The congregation has had only two deacons—Amos Landis 1906-22 and Levi C. Hartzler 1943-. The membership has grown continuously.

The congregation worshiped in the college chapel from the beginning until 1950, then in the College Union Auditorium until the erection of a joint church-chapel (seats 1,100), dedicated in August 1959, the cost of erection and maintenance being borne equally by the college and the congregation. The church has a circular sanctuary surrounded by rooms for Sunday school and other purposes.

H.S.B.

Goshenhoppen, the name given in colonial times to that part of the Perkiomen valley north of Schwenksville, Pa., also the former name of the present town of Bally, Pa. There is evidence that the Hereford (q.v.) Mennonite Church was sometimes referred to as Goshenhoppen. Also sometime before 1749 J. H. Spogel, a Lutheran, donated a tract of land in Upper Hanover Township, Montgomery County, Pa., about 5 miles east of Bally, jointly to the Lutheran, Reformed, and Mennonite denominations for church, cemetery, and school purposes. A union meetinghouse was erected on this tract, but the Mennonites never built a meetinghouse of their own here. A number of Mennonites are buried in the cemetery of what is now the new Goshenhoppen Reformed Church, the former union church.

H.S.B.

J. C. Wenger, History of the Mennonites of the Franconia Conference (Telford, 1937) 238-40.

Gospel Church of God in Christ Mennonite Church, Barron, Wis., is located 8 miles northwest of Barron. It had 56 members in 1958, with Peter P. Toews as minister. The church was first listed in the Yearbook (CGC) for 1958.

M.G.

Gospel Fellowship Mennonite Church (MC), Shallow Water, Kan., organized in April 1955, meets in a public school but plans to build in Shallow Water. In 1959 it had 28 members, with Eugene Schulz as pastor.

M.G.

Gospel Light Mennonite Brethren Church, 760 McMillan Ave., Winnipeg, Man., was founded as a mission in 1950, received as a full member into the Manitoba M.B. Conference in 1955. In the change to McMillan Avenue in 1959, from 405 Logan Avenue (meetinghouse purchased here in 1950), the name was changed to Fort Rouge M.B. Church. In 1959 the membership was 47, with David Nickel as pastor.

F.C.P.

Gospel Mennonite Church of the Rudnerweide (q.v.) group, at 232 Nassau St., Winnipeg, Man., was organized in 1956. In 1959 the membership was 80, with Ben W. Sawatzky as pastor.

F.C.P.

Grace Bible College: see Grace Bible Institute.

Grace Hill Mennonite Church: see Gnadenberg Mennonite Church.

Grace Mennonite Church (MC), located at 5700 Nall Ave., Mission, Kan., a suburb of Kansas City, was organized in 1957 by former members of the Argentine Mennonite Church. It is a member of the South Central Conference. In 1959 it had 43 members, with D. Lowell Nissley as pastor.

H.S.B.

Gracevale Hutterite Bruderhof of the Schmiedeleut (q.v.) branch, located near Winfred, S.D., was established in 1948 by the Gracevale Bruderhof with ten families from Tschetter Bruderhof. Sam Wipf was chosen to the ministry here in 1950 and ordained in 1957. The Gracevale Bruderhof now (1958) has 104 souls with 30 baptized members.

D.D.

Gramberg, K. P. C. A., a physician, married to Helena Goossen (q.v.), served 1921-46 on Java (q.v.) under the Dutch Mennonite Mission Association. In 1930-43 he was director of the medical mission in this field. In August 1943 he was arrested by the Japanese invaders and interned in a concentration camp. After his release in August 1945 he was for a short time again active in organizing the medical care on the mission field and restoring what had been destroyed or burned down by fanatical Mohammedans. In 1946 he returned to Holland.

vdZ.

Grants Pass (Ore.) Mennonite Church (MC), a member of the Pacific Coast Conference, located 1½ miles south of the junction of highways 99 and 199, was organized in August 1957. In 1959 the membership was 35, with Max G. Yoder as pastor.

M.G.

Griesheim in the Palatinate, Germany, is mentioned in 1732 as a Mennonite congregation, with Hans Burkhalter as preacher. Later on in the 18th century the Griesheim Mennonites belonged to the Oberflörsheim (q.v.) congregation. (Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 1248 f., 1472; Müller, Berner Täufer, 211.)

vdZ.

Griswold (Man.) M.B. Church: see Alexander M.B. Church.

Groot, Hendrik L. de, composer of the Dutch Mennonite hymnal Grote Koren Bloem en 't Groen Spruytgen, of toegift op de Grote Koren-Bloem (Ter Ghoude, i.e., Gouda, 1622). (Blaupot t. C., Holland II, 211.)
vdZ.

Grossweide Mennonite Brethren Church, located north of Horndean, Man., was founded in 1896, became a fully recognized M.B. church in 1925, having been organized by former Sommerfeld and Old Colony members. Its present meetinghouse was built in 1954 replacing the former building which burned in 1953. In 1958 the membership was 128, with J. J. Neufeld as pastor. F.C.P.

Gross-Werder: see Marienburg Werder.

Guarituba (Brazil) Mennonite Brethren Church was organized in 1957 as a daughter congregation of the Bouqueirao (q.v.) M.B. church, although its meetinghouse had been erected in 1952. In 1957 its membership was 56, with Jakob Wiens as leader.

H.S.B.

Guavate Mennonite Church (MC), Cayey, Puerto Rico, was founded in 1953. In 1954 a small chapel was erected which was destroyed by a hurricane in 1956. In 1957 a new church was built. In 1958 the membership was 35, with John Driver as pastor.

H.S.B.

Gulfhaven Mennonite Church (MC), located 17 miles northwest of Gulfport, Miss., a member of the South Central Conference, was organized Jan. 5, 1922, by Bishop Andrew Shenk of Oronogo, Mo., with 28 charter members. J. B. Brunk was the first pastor, followed later by D. S. Brunk. In 1948 the church was remodeled. The members are largely Mennonites from northern states or their descendants. In 1957 the membership was 62, with Paul Hershey as pastor-bishop.

P.H.

Gundy, George (1880-1951), a leader in the Central (Illinois) Conference, was born at Carlock, Ill., son of Jacob Gundy and Lena Kinsinger, and married Clara Strubhar in 1904, with whom he had three sons. He was ordained minister on Oct. 4, 1909, and served two pastorates: Congerville, Ill., 1909-25, and Meadows, Ill., 1925-51. He served as superintendent of the Meadows Old People's Home many years until 1945. He was president of the Central Conference Ministerial Association 1911-26, and member of the conference mission board and of the Congo Inland Mission Board. He died Sept. 16, 1951.

H.S.B.

Habecker Mennonite Church (MC), in the Manorland of Lancaster County, Pa., among the settlers of which were Neff, Kauffman, and Baughman families. David Martin was one of the first preachers, followed by Henry Neff. Christian Kauffman was the first native bishop. In 1761 the Penn heirs granted a tract of land to "Henry Neave for the Society of Anna Baptists within and in the neighborhood of said Township (of Manor)." They built a log church, replaced in 1820 by a brick church 35 x 45 ft., in 1898 again by a brick church, 50 x 75 ft. A beautiful cemetery adjoins the church. Sunday school started in 1888. The congregation is a part of the Manor District. In 1959 the membership was 125, and Christian B. Charles and Landis E. Myer were the ministers.

I.D.L.

Habermann's Prayerbook, first published in 1567 at Wittenberg, Germany, by Johann Habermann, one of the most widely used Protestant prayerbooks ever published, was popular among the Mennonites of Germany and the eastern United States (first edition in America by Christopher Saur at Germantown, Pa., in 1749). It is still widely used by the Old Order Amish in the form of the smaller edition, Der Kleine Habermann, or Christliche Morgen- und Abend-Gebeter auf alle Tage der Woche.

H.S.B.

Robert Friedmann, Mennonite Piety Through the Centuries (Goshen, 1949) 203 f.

Haile Mariam Mammo Memorial Hospital, at Nazareth, Ethiopia, an 80-bed general hospital, was established in 1946 and is operated by the Ethiopia Mennonite Mission under the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities.

H.S.B.

Handicrafts: see Ceramics, Crafts, Pottery, Needlework.

Hannibal (Mo.) Mennonite Mission: see Mennonite Mission Church.

Hanske Sascher(s), an Anabaptist martyr, was arrested at the recapture of the Oldeklooster (q.v.). On April 7, 1535, he was executed at Leeuwarden, capital of Friesland, by beheading. (Vos, Menno Simons, 228.)

vdZ.

Hardin County (Ohio) Old Order Amish settlement consisted in 1958 of two districts (congregations), both located south of Kenton, the East with 27 members and Levi M. Beachy as bishop, the West with 22 members and Jonas Mast as minister.

H.S.B.

Harmony Corners Beachy Amish Mennonite Church, at Harmony Corners, about 10 miles east of Chestertown, Md., is sometimes known as the Chestertown church. It was organized in 1952, its church built in 1954, and in 1959 had 27 members. The ministers were Rudy Yoder, Sam Beachy, and Arthur Martin Beachy.

M.G.

Harmony Mennonite Church (MC), now extinct, located near Harmony, Butler Co., Pa., began in 1814 when Abraham and John Ziegler, Jacob and David Stouffer, Henry Buckle, and John Boyer formed the Harmony Farm Company and bought from the Harmony Society (a Christian communist group) 9000 acres, including the town of Harmony, and three villages with all their shops, industries, and church. The church was used until 1825 when the present structure was built, which is still in good repair. John Boyer was the bishop and first pastor. Others who followed were Jacob Kolb, Joseph Ziegler, who served the church for 45 years, and possibly Jacob Moyer.

The congregation lived to itself, holding out against English preaching, evangelistic services, and Sunday school until the younger generation had been lost to the church. Services continued until c1900. Memorial services have been held from time to time, the last one July 12, 1950. J.A.S.

Harrow (Ont.) United Mennonite Church (GCM) was organized in 1953, although the meetinghouse was built in 1950, located 1½ miles north of Harrow in Essex County, Ontario. In 1959 the membership was 63, with Herman R. Lepp as pastor. H.S.B.

Harshbarger, Emmett Leroy (1901-42), a Mennonite (GCM) teacher and peace worker, was born Sept. 16, 1901, at West Liberty, Ohio, the son of Samuel H. Harshbarger. He graduated from Bluffton College with an A.B. (1925) and received his A.M. (1929) and his Ph.D. (1933) from Ohio State University. He married Eva Grace Geiger Aug. 19, 1925. He taught a number of rural and high schools in Ohio, was instructor of history and speech at Bluffton 1925-30, and professor of history at Bethel College 1933-42. He died July 26, 1942.

Harshbarger was very active in his peace witness, in which capacity he filled various offices in the General Conference and as Dean of the Kansas Institute of International Relations since 1936. C.K.

Hartland Christian Association was organized in October, 1945 by members of the M.B. and K.M.B. churches in the Reedley, Cal., area, to own and operate a church camp. In 1946 it purchased 160 acres in Tulare County, Cal., c10 miles east of Badger near the village of Hartland, at an elevation of 4500 ft. Retreats for the youth of the churches had been held since 1940. These were now held at Hartland Camp, and a full range of camp activities for all ages was added. The M.B. Camping Committee provides the programs. H.S.B.

Harvey Country Mennonite Brethren Church is located 9 miles southwest of Harvey, S.D. It was organized with 10 members in 1898. Christian Reimche was its first pastor, a position he held for about 30 years. After members moved into Harvey, the Harvey City (q.v.) church was built and services were conducted in both places. In 1957 the congregation had 61 members, with Werner Kroeker as its pastor. M.G.

Hausbreitenbach, a district in western Thuringia (q.v.) jointly administered in Reformation times by Electoral Saxony and Hesse, and hence because of the differences between the two governmental policies toward the Anabaptists and in particular the milder attitude of Philip of Hesse, a territory where Anabaptism could more readily spread. The first traces of Anabaptism here appeared in 1528, coming chiefly from Hersfeld and Sorga in Hesse, with Melchior Rinck (q.v.) as the chief propagator. The first arrests occurred in 1531, the victims divided between Saxony (executed) and Hesse (released). Further arrests were made in 1533, among them Fritz Erbe (q.v.), who was held in prison in Eisenach on the Wartburg until his death in 1548. The remaining prisoners were freed. Until the middle of the century the Anabaptists in Hausbreitenbach continued to maintain themselves vigorously, as is evidenced by the repeated complaints of Justus Menius, superintendent at Eisenach, in whose territory Hausbreitenbach lay. (For a fuller treatment see Thuringia and the books by Wappler listed there, especially Die Stellung Kursachsens.) H.S.B.

Hausmann, Hans: misspelling of Hansmann, Hans, (q.v.).

Hazaribagh, a political district in the Province of Bihar, India, the northern area of which comprises the eastern part of the Bihar Mennonite Mission (MC) (q.v.) field. It contains Kodarma (q.v.), the first place occupied by the missionaries, and Chatra, another important town. S.J.Ho.

Hebron Mennonite Church (GCM), Mayfair, Sask., was organized in 1928 and its church built in 1929. The membership in 1959 was 38, with Frank Ens as pastor. M.G.

Hegenwalt, Erhard, once a teacher in the Pfäfers Monastery, Canton of St. Gall, Switzerland, a friend of Conrad Grebel, a student in Wittenberg in 1524-26, wrote a letter to Conrad Grebel from Wittenberg dated Jan. 1, 1525, now preserved in the Stadtbibliothek St. Gallen (Vadiana) ms. 31, 222. The letter is part of a lost correspondence which included at least two letters from Grebel and two from Hegenwalt. Grebel may have met Hegenwalt in January 1523 at the disputation held in Zürich at that time when the latter attended and edited the minutes, which were published soon after. Hegenwalt's letter reports that Luther had received the letter written to him by Grebel and was sending greetings to Grebel from Luther who wanted the group in Zürich to know that he was not "illdisposed" toward them. The Hegenwalt letter is of considerable value because it reports on 13 points mentioned in the Grebel letter to Hegenwalt which Hegenwalt in turn tries to refute. It is possible that the Erhard Hegenwaldt who secured the M.D. degree in Wittenberg, and also a city physician in Frankfurt a.M. by the same name in 1540, were the same as the letter writer. H.S.B.

For a full discussion of the letter see H. S. Bender, "Conrad Grebel" (Goshen, 1950) 119-22; ADB XI, 275, "Hegenwald, Erhard," by Bertheau.

Henrick Dacho(s), an Anabaptist martyr, was executed in the Steen prison at Antwerp on Oct. 7, 1558. His wife, Adriana (q.v.) Lambrechts, was executed at the same place on March 19, 1559. (Génard, Antw. Arch.-Blad. IX, 17; XIV, 24 f.) H.S.B.

Herald Book and Publishing Company: see Herald Publishing Company.

Herald of Truth, a 16-page 9 x 12 in. monthly, printed by the offset process, published at Uniontown, Ohio, by a Publication Board representing two congregations in Ohio which had withdrawn from the Conservative Mennonite Conference in 1956 and one in Ontario which had withdrawn from the Ontario A.M. Conference in 1956. John J. Overholt has been the editor from the beginning. In Jan., 1959 the Publication Board merged with the Board of Directors of the Pilgrim Mennonite Press to form a new board called Herald of Truth Publications, which announced its intention to publish a youth periodical and Sunday-school lesson helps for all age levels, also tracts on timely topics. The first issue of the periodical was April, 1957. H.S.B.

Heresy was officially defined in medieval and Reformation times as deviation from the official creeds of the church, e.g., the Nicene Creed (325), the Chalcedonian Creed (451), the Augsburg Confession (1530). It was considered the obligation of the state to uphold and defend the creeds of the church, and to punish heretics, who were thus not only apostates from the church or its faith, but violators of the civil law and punishable as criminals. The Anabaptists were thus in most areas in Reformation times heretics and criminals. H.S.B.

Hernhut(t)ers: see Moravians in the Netherlands.

Herold Book and Publishing Company, the successor to the Western Book and Publishing Company (q.v.), was organized Oct. 2, 1909, with the following as directors: H. P. Krehbiel, C. E. Krehbiel, J. W. Krehbiel, D. R. Krehbiel, G. A. Haury, Jacob H. Richert, John C. Goering, J. P. Andres, and J. H. Epp. Officers were: H. P. Krehbiel president, G. A. Haury vice-president, and C. E. Krehbiel secretary-treasurer. H. P. Krehbiel was elected as manager and C. E. Krehbiel as editor. The company maintained the Bee Hive Book Store at 508 Main St., Newton, Kan., and published Der Herold, besides doing custom printing.

On Aug. 4, 1914, the Herold store building and stock were destroyed by a fire. The company was then moved to 722 Main St., where a new building was erected. The company was dissolved Dec. 1, 1919, and the store building sold to H. P. and C. E. Krehbiel. Final liquidation of the assets of the company was made in May 1926. Meanwhile, the Herald Publishing Company (q.v.) had been organized to carry on the publication and bookstore enterprises of the Herold Book and Publishing Company. ("Minute Book of the Herold Book and Publishing Company.") J.F.S.

Herrenhagen was a Mennonite village established during the second half of the 17th century by Dutch Mennonites in the Marienburg Werder (q.v.) west of the Nogat River. C.K.

Horst Penner, Ansiedlung mennonitischer Niederländer im Weichselmündungsgebiet von der Mitte des 16. Jahrhunderts bis zum Beginn der preussischen Zeit (Weierhof, 1940) 63.

Hess Mennonite Church (MC), a member of the Lancaster Conference, located northeast of Lititz, Pa., on the farm of Jacob Hess, who acquired his land in 1735. The congregation met in the homes of the members until 1856, when the first meetinghouse of brick was built. This meetinghouse was replaced by a new one, 54 x 70 ft., in 1891, which was renovated in 1947. The Sunday school opened in 1897. The congregation is a part of the Hammer Creek Bishop District. It was the home of preachers John Hess (1768-1830), a grandson of Jacob, Jonas H. Hess (1841-1919), John S. Hess, Richard Hess, and Raymond Bucher. The last three were serving in 1959, with Amos S. Horst and Mahlon Zimmerman as bishops. The membership in 1959 was 274. I.D.L.

Hesselink (Hesseling) (II, 728 f.): Supplement. There were two branches of this family, one living at Deventer and Groningen, and one at Sneek and Bolsward; the names of both families have various forms: Hesselink, Hesseling, Hesselingh; these branches are probably not related. The ancestor of the Deventer-Groningen branch was (1) Pieter Hesselink (Bocholt 1589-Deventer 1670), who was a manufacturer of bombazine at Deventer. His son (2) Jacob Hesselink (Deventer 1624-Enkhuizen 1712) was an untrained preacher of the Groningen Old Flemish congregation at Enkhuizen. (3) Willem Jacobsz Hesselink (q.v., Enkhuizen 1648-Groningen 1720), a son of (2) Jacob, was an Old Flemish preacher at Groningen, as was his son (4) Jacob Hesselink (d. 1760) from 1725. Three sons of (5) Hendrik Hesselink, of Groningen (a relative of (2) Jacob Hesselink), married to Mayke Wybes Zeeman (daughter of preacher Wybe Pietersz Zeeman, q.v., of Heerenveen), went into the ministry. They were (6) Wybo Hesselink (c1743-78), (7) Gerrit Hesseling (b. 1752, not 1755 as stated ME II, 729; d. 1811), and (8) Matthijs Hesselink (Groningen 1755-Hoorn 1839). (Information by C. F. Nannigavan Lessen, of Bussum, Holland.) vBZ.

Hiebert, Nicholas Nikolai (1874-1957), a Mennonite Brethren teacher and missionary, was born July 29, 1874, in Lichtfelde, Ukraine, South Russia, the oldest of the twelve children of Nikolai C. and Maria Wiens Hiebert. He emigrated with his parents to America in 1875 and settled in Mountain Lake, Minn. He attended McPherson College in 1897-98. On May 28, 1899, he married Susie Wiebe. Among their twelve children were John N. C., Lando, and Waldo Hiebert. He was appointed missionary to India by the M.B. Church in 1898 and sailed in 1899. After selecting and opening a field he returned from India in 1901 because of ill health, and then traveled for the conference in the interest of missions 1901-12 and served as secretary to the Board of Foreign Missions 1903-36. He taught district school five years, served as principal of the Mountain Lake Bible School 1912-27, and was instructor in Bible at Tabor College 1930-32. Residence since retirement: Salem, Ore., 1935-42; Blaine, Wash., 1942-45; Hillsboro, Kan., 1947-d. 57. He published Missions-Album (M.B. Publishing House c1914) and Commentary for Sunday School Quarterly. He died at Hillsboro, Sept. 11, 1957. L.Hi.

Hirzel, a town in canton Zürich, Switzerland; see Horgen.

Hisse Lambertsdochter, an Anabaptist martyr, arrested at the recapture of the Oldeklooster (q.v.). She was drowned at Leeuwarden, capital of Friesland, on April 14, 1535. (Vos, Menno Simons, 229.)
vdZ.

Historic Peace Churches is a term widely used for the three denominations which have for centuries held the position that the New Testament forbids Christian participation in war and violence. These three are the Brethren, the Friends, and the Mennonites. The term came into common usage in America between World Wars I and II. In 1922 the Friends initiated the Conference of Pacifist Churches, which met in 1923, 1926, 1927, 1929, and 1931. In the last conference, H. P. Krehbiel, a Mennonite (GCM) leader of Newton, Kan., was appointed a committee of one to arrange the next meeting; but because of the economic depression it was not held until November 1935, when it met in Newton as the "Conference of Historic Peace Churches" (not to be confused with the Conference of Historic Peace Churches—q.v.—which was organized in Canada in 1940). Since 1935 the Conference of Historic Peace Churches has met in 1937, 1938, and on numerous other occasions. However, the meetings are not regularly scheduled, and are not always the same in character. They are planned by the Continuation Committee (q.v.) set up by the 1935 meeting. Similar conferences have been held in Europe since 1947 by the Continuation Committee of the Historic Peace Churches there. The term "Historic Peace Churches" has become widely accepted beyond the circles of the Christian pacifist churches. M.G.

Melvin Gingerich, Service for Peace (Akron, 1949) 25-38.

Historiography II. Switzerland (II, 757b): Supplement. R. Feller, "Die ersten bernischen Wiedertäufer," Archiv des historischen Vereins des Kantons Bern, 1931; "Bernische Reformation und der Staat," in Berner Universitätsreden (1928); H. Käser, "Auserkirchliche christliche Versammlungen im Unteremmental," in Brosamen, 1926, 1-9; "Chorgericht und Landvogt in Behandlung der Täufergeschichte," Blätter für Bernische Geschichte und Altertumskunde (1928, No. 2); R. Feller, "Sittengesetze der Bernischen Reformation," in Festschrift, Fr. E. Welti (1932) 54-82 (deals with moral criticisms expressed by Anabaptists in the disputations of 1532 and 1538); Leo von Muralt, "Gespräch mit den Wiedertäufern am 22. Januar 1528 zu Bern" (Notizen des Stadtschreibers Peter Cyro), Ztscht für schweizerische Kirchengeschichte (1932, No. 4); T. Schiess, "Der Glaubenszwang in der St. Gallischen Kirche des XVII. Jahrhunderts. Der 'Wiedertäufer' Josef Hochreutiner u. Pfarrer Michael Bingg," reprint from Schriften des Vereins für Geschichte des Bodensees und seiner Umgebung, No. 51 (n.d. 1925?) 1-23; A. Bucher, Die Reformation in den Freien Aemtern und in der Stadt Bremgarten (Beilage zum Jahresbericht der Kantonalen Lehranstalt Sarnen), which is a dissertation at Freiburg (Sw.) 1950, contains a section, "Die Täufer in den Freien Aemtern"; Clyde Smith, The Amish Man (Toronto, 1912).

Hobbe Buwezoon, an Anabaptist martyr, arrested at the recapture of the Oldeklooster (q.v.) and beheaded at Leeuwarden, capital of Friesland, on April 12, 1535. (Vos, Menno Simons, 228.)

vdZ.

Hoeksteen, the name of two Dutch Mennonite old ladies' homes, one at Amsterdam, of which there is only scarce information, and one at Leiden. The Amsterdam Hoeksteen Hofje (home) was founded before 1647. It then belonged to the Frisian congregation. After the merger of the Frisians with the Zonists (q.v.) at Amsterdam in 1752, the "Nieuwe Hofje" was built at the Prinsengracht on the site of the former Arke Noachs (Frisian) meetinghouse. At Lieden the Hoeksteen home on the Levendaal was founded in 1660. Until 1701 it belonged to the Flemish congregation. After the merger of this congregation with the Waterlanders, it was decided to unite the Waterlander Bethlehem home and the Flemish Hoeksteen and give up the Bethlehem home, the Hoeksteen home henceforth to be called Bethlehem. But the planned union did not become effective until 1811, when the old and dilapidated Bethlehem home was sold.

vdZ.

Inv. Arch. Amst. II, 490-520; L. G. le Poole, Bijdragen tot de Kennis van . . . de Doopsgezinden te Leiden (Leiden, 1905) 50, 58 ff.

Hof, a German term with various applications used to designate (1) a farm, (2) a farmyard, (3) a court, (4) a courtyard, (5) a country house or manor house, the household of a sovereign. In Anabaptist history it appears in the word Bruderhof to refer to a Hutterite household with its buildings and acreage. In German areas it is used to refer to a farm or large estate which may be occupied by one family (e.g., Althof) or by several with individually owned tracts (e.g., Branchweilerhof). Numerous congregations have been named after such Hofs (e.g., Kohlhof, Weierhof), and in South Germany many congregations began as household (Hof) meetings.

H.S.B.

Gerhard Hein, "The Development of the Mennonite 'Hof' of the Seventeenth Century Palatinate into the Mennonite Church of Pfalz-Rheinland Today," MQR XXIX (1955) 188-96.

Hofer Brothers. Joseph and Michael Hofer were two young married brothers of the Hutterian faith in South Dakota, who were drafted in World War I and sent to Camp Lewis in 1918. Because they refused to wear the military uniform and to obey other military orders they were court-martialed and sentenced to 20 years in Alcatraz (California) prison. In November, after suffering terrible mistreatment for four months at Alcatraz, they with two other Hutterites who had endured the same kind of punishment were sent to Ft. Leavenworth. Forced to stand in the cold air for several hours without their outer clothing while waiting for their prison garb, the two men became ill and died a few days later. In the meantime their two friends had to stand for nine hours a day with their hands manacled through the prison bars on a diet of bread and water. Fourteen days of this treatment were alternated with fourteen days of regular diet. Eventually an order from Secretary of War Baker ended this kind of treatment of conscientious objectors. David Hofer was released from prison that winter, but his friend Jacob Wipf was not released until April 13, 1919. "This moving story," wrote C. Henry Smith, "reads more like a page from the martyrlogy of the European Mennonites in the sixteenth century, than like an actual experience in America in the twentieth." Although this was the most extreme case of mistreatment given conscientious objectors in America during World War I, hundreds of Mennonites and other objectors suffered various forms of indignities and cruelties in camp guardhouses and military prisons during those years, usually, to be sure, at the hands of local camp officials and lower military officers without the full knowledge of the War Department in Washington. Both the President and the Secretary of War showed a sympathetic spirit toward sincere objectors. (See Conscientious Objectors.)

M.G.

C. H. Smith, The Coming of the Russian Mennonites (Berne, 1927) 276-83; J. S. Hartzler, Mennonites in the World War (Scottsdale, 1922).

Hoffnungsfeld Mennonite Church (GCM), at Carrot River, Sask., was organized Nov. 24, 1929, its meetinghouse having been built in 1928. In 1958 the membership was 90, with P. G. Epp as pastor. H.S.B.

Hoffnungsfeld Mennonite Church (GCM) at Rabbit Lake, Sask., was organized at three places in 1928, the three meetinghouses built as follows: Rabbit Lake (1928), membership 23 in 1959; Mayfair (1934), membership 21; Glenbush (1936), membership 55; total membership 99, with Jacob T. Loewen as pastor. H.S.B.

Hoffnungsfeld-Petaigan (Sask.) Mennonite Church (GCM) was organized in 1937, when it also dedicated its building (begun in 1934). In 1958 it had 29 members, with C. C. Boschmann as elder-pastor. H.S.B.

Hohburg, Christian: see Hoburg, Christian.

Holyrood Mennonite Church (MC), Edmonton, Alberta, was begun in 1956 as a mission. A meetinghouse was built in 1957. Howard Snider has been serving as pastor since 1957. H.S.B.

Home for the Friendless, Hillsboro, Kan., officially the Industrial School and Hygiene Home for Friendless Persons, chartered in 1890, was a co-operative venture for the care of orphan children. Although it was largely controlled by the Krimmer Mennonite Brethren, it was also supported financially by the Brethren in Christ and the Mennonite Church (MC). Financial reports of the Home appeared regularly in the Herald of Truth (MC), and for a time Joseph F. Brunk (MC) served as the superintendent of the Home. The project was, therefore, a demonstration of inter-Mennonite co-operation. (See Industrial School . . .) M.G.

Home Missions, a common term among North American Protestants for mission work carried on within the boundaries of the United States and Canada, hence more recently often referred to as "National Missions." The most nearly corresponding German term is "Innere Mission." Home missions are distinguished from foreign missions (q.v.). The one exception is the work among the North American Indians carried on by the General Conference Mennonite Church which includes this work under foreign missions because of the native Indian language and culture. Home missions include the following types of missionary outreach, for which the articles appearing in this ENCYCLOPEDIA give detailed reports: City Missions, Jewish Evangelism, Negro Missions, Rescue Missions, and Rural Missions. See also Evangelism. The purpose of all home mission effort is to found churches, except in the case of rescue missions, which seek to "rescue" "down-and-outs" and turn them over to existing churches.

In two of the major North American Mennonite bodies separate boards were organized to carry on home missions, the Home Mission Board of the General Conference Mennonite Church (q.v.) and the Home Missions Board of the Mennonite Brethren Church (q.v.). In the Mennonite Church (MC) the board which operates the foreign missions has also operated some home missions, usually city only. Every district conference has a mission board; they, with few exceptions, were set up to operate home missions only, and many local congregations operate local mission outposts. Only in the Virginia Conference has a separate home mission board been set up. The total number of home missions, both city and rural, operated by the Mennonite Church under general or district boards and local congregations was over 300 in 1958.

Almost all Mennonite groups in North America engage in home missions in some form, city or rural, and most conferences have a home missions committee or a board for this purpose; in some cases the district conferences have organized committees or boards. Western Gospel Mission (q.v.) and Western Children's Mission (q.v.) are inter-Mennonite home mission boards in Canada. The Conference of Mennonites in Canada (GCM) has a home mission board, called Pioneer Mission (q.v.). (See also Evangelism.) H.S.B.

Honduras, a republic of Central America, with a population of 1,700,000 and an area of 43,227 square miles. The country is mountainous, very fertile, though mostly uncultivated, and covered with rich forests. The chief export is bananas, but it also has valuable minerals and extensive cattle raising. The Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities (MC) established a mission in Honduras in 1950. By 1957 the three stations of Trujillo, Tocoa, and Gualaco had been established. Nine full-time and two short-term workers were on the field, three others were in language school, and two were on furlough. The membership was 30.

North of Honduras is the small colony of British Honduras. In 1958 three Mennonite groups from Mexico were in the process of buying land and settling in British Honduras. These were the Old Colony Mennonites, the Kleine Gemeinde, and the Sommerfelders. Old Colony Mennonites of Durango were negotiating for land in the Republic of Honduras. These Mennonites were leaving Mexico because of their need for more land and because of a feeling that government regulations in Mexico were encroaching too much on the freedom of their settlement life.

In May 1959 a total of over 360 families totaling 1,627 persons (775 children under 14) had settled in three locations in British Honduras, largely in three colonies: Blue Creek settlement in the extreme northwest corner on a 115,000-acre jungle tract; Belize (actually 50 miles west of the city) on an 18,000-acre tract; and Orange Walk (60 miles north of Belize) on scattered individual family farms who expect to settle on a 17,000-acre tract at Shipyard, nine miles south of Orange Walk. M.G.

Leo Driedger, "From Mexico to British Honduras," Menn. Life XIII (October 1958) 160-66.

Hooft, a Dutch Mennonite family of Amsterdam since the 16th century. It was a side branch of the Reformed Hooft family, descending from a West Frisian family of captains of merchant vessels. One of the Reformed descendants was Cornelis Pietersz Hooft (1547-1626), who as a burgomaster of Amsterdam always defended the Mennonites and other nonconformists against the presumption of the Calvinist church, and his son Pieter Cornelisz Hooft (Amsterdam, 1581-The Hague, 1647) was an outstanding Dutch poet.

In the Mennonite branch, whose members were merchants at Amsterdam and in the 17th century also at Haarlem, was Jan Gerritsz Hooft (Amsterdam, 1584-1644). He was director of the Dutch Levantine trade and in 1616-20 a deacon of the Amsterdam Waterlander congregation. In 1625 he sided with Nittert Obbes (q.v.) and came into conflict with the church leaders (Yearbook Amstelodamum XXV, 1928, 85, 100). Some other members of this family also served the Amsterdam congregation as deacons, e.g., Jan Hooft Hartsen, serving 1777-82 and 1787-92. In Haarlem some Hoofts were deacons and trustees of the Mennonite orphanage. Here Maria Hooft was married to the Haarlem preacher Coenraad van Diepenbroek (q.v.).

vdZ.

Hoogland, a Mennonite family in the Dutch province of Friesland, mostly farmers and often deacons of the church since the 18th century. They lived in the Bildt region and belonged to the congregations of St. Anna-Parochie and Oudebildtziijl. Sjouke Johannes Hoogland (1866-1939) published a historical paper in Dj 1932.

vdZ.

Hooker (Okla.) Mennonite Brethren Church: see Adams M.B. Church and Sharon M.B. Church.

Hooks and Eyes, German Haken (or Haften) und Oesen. The modern Old Order Amish require the use of hooks and eyes as fasteners on men's and boys' coats and vests (buttons are used on other clothing). These fasteners have become so much a mark of the Amish that they are sometimes called simply the "Hook and Eye People." In South Germany the Amish were known as "Häftler" (q.v.) and the Mennonites "Knöpfler" (q.v.). The reason for the Amish practice is obscure since no Biblical authority is or can be cited, such as is the case with the beard. The obvious answer is that the Amish have simply perpetuated, out of their basic conservatism and opposition to change, the old type of fastener in use before buttons came into general use. Buttons were at first more expensive and often used primarily for ornamentation; hence their introduction would naturally find opposition as a violation of simplicity and nonconformity. H.S.B.

Horekill (Hoere Kill, Whorekills), the location of the Plockhoy (q.v.) Mennonite colony, which existed in southern Delaware for one year 1662-64. The exact location can no longer be determined. Visser's map of the New World (c1665), of which the relevant section was printed by Harder (p. 64), shows "Hoere Kill" on the west side of the estuary of the Delaware across from Cape May on the eastern shore, which would locate it about 20 miles north of the present town of Lewes. The Visser map locates "Swanendael" along the west shore some 25 miles north of Hoere Kill. Both names are sometimes used to refer to the Plockhoy colony, but they cannot refer to the same place. The State Archivist of Delaware responded to an inquiry by Harder as follows: "The little colony was clearly in the vicinity of present-day Lewes. The Horekill, or Whorekills, is now called Lewes Creek and serves as a portion of the Lewes and Rehoboth Canal." Plockhoy later had a house and lot in Lewes.

A state highway historical marker at the edge of the town of Lewes erected in 1932 bears the following legend: "Lewes. Under orders from Peter Stuyvesant the Dutch erected a Fort at Hoorn Kil (Lewes Creek) 1659 but were soon dispossessed by the Marylanders. Here was also a communistic settlement established in 1662 by Mennonites from Holland under Peter Cornelis Plockhoy. Sir Robert Carr 1664 'destroyed the Quaking Colony of Plockhoy to a Naile.'" H.S.B.

Leland Harder, Plockhoy from Zurich-zee (Newton, 1952).

Horgen, a town (pop. 10,000) in the canton of Zürich (q.v.), Switzerland, some 9 miles south of the city of Zürich on the west bank of the lake of Zürich, a village in Reformation times subject politically and ecclesiastically to the city of Zürich. There are no traces of the Anabaptists in the village and surrounding area in the early 16th century, but the presence of a congregation in the neighborhood (Horgenberg) at the end of the century and the first half of the 17th suggests there must have been some members there earlier. A group of 15 Anabaptists were arrested in Horgen in 1589, four of whom were from Horgen and seven from adjoining Wädenswil. The four from Horgen included two preachers, Hans Landis (q.v.) and Heini Landis, also Uli Suter and Hans Summerauer. Hans Landis was the leader of the congregation.

In 1608 the strongest measures were applied to crush the Anabaptist movement in the region of Horgen, Wädenswil, and Hirzel. The records of the persecution reveal that the authorities estimated the group to consist of 40 men and women, who held their meetings in barns and forests or in the home of the farmer Hans Landis, at that time over 60 years of age. Little is known about the congregation; but it was discovered to have a fund for the aid of the poor administered by Jacob Isler, apparently the deacon. Landis and Isler were arrested in 1608, but both escaped from their prison (the Wellenberg) in Zürich.

On Jan. 6, 1613, a disputation was held in the Wädenswil castle with the 15 Anabaptists who responded to the invitation, at which the Reformed pastors of Wädenswil, Horgen, and Richterswil took part. Among the Anabaptist speakers were Galli Fuchs of Richterswil, who said he had been converted by a missionary from Moravia, and a certain Bachmann. The disputation was fruitless and resulted in the renewed application of severe penalties including confiscation of property, exile, and execution. In the summer of 1613 Landis, Isler, Fuchs, Stephan Zehender, Hans Meili, and Paul Degia (Galatz) were imprisoned. Pressure to recant having failed, vain attempts were made to get them to emigrate voluntarily. The six men were then sentenced to galley slavery, but Isler, Fuchs, and Zehender at last agreed to emigrate. The other three escaped from prison in Solothurn and returned to their homes. The affair awakened great sympathy for them and as a result the Anabaptist congregation grew. After a time the three were again imprisoned. Landis was finally beheaded on Sept. 29, 1614, the last Anabaptist executed in Switzerland, although others later died in prison. Landis' widow was imprisoned for a time.

Upon this execution a number of the Anabaptists emigrated. In 1638 eight Anabaptists were discovered to be living in the environs of Horgen and Hirzel, three of them bearing the name Landis, and one Rudolf Baumann. In 1637 a large number were imprisoned in Zürich, one of them Hans Landis, the son of the martyr. Most of the captives were held in prison until 1640. In this year and the following years the Anabaptist congregation was broken by the confiscation of property, and most of the members apparently emigrated to Alsace and the Palatinate. Among those who suffered confiscation were Hans Landis, Felix Landis, Jakob Rusterholz, Konrad Strickler-Landis, Hans Rudolf Baumann-Landis, Oswald Landis, Uli Furrer, Hans Huber, Hans Asper, Elsbeth Hofstetter, Barbara Bruppach, Verena Bruppach (widow of Michel), and the widow of Heinrich Ritter. The proceeds of the confiscation were applied to the costs of the trials and imprisonment of the Anabaptists, and the remainder offered to the heirs who would return to the state church. This was the end of the Anabaptist congregation in Horgen, Wädenswil, and Hirzel. Numerous descendants of the Landis and Brubacher families are found today in South Germany and in the United States. H.S.B.

Paul Kläui, Geschichte der Gemeinde Horgen (Horgen, 1952) 185-93; idem, "Hans Landis of Zürich, the Last Anabaptist Martyr," MQR (1948) 203-12.

Horodyszczce (German, Horodischtz). A congregation of Swiss-Volhynian Mennonites was located in the Volhynian (western Russia) village of Horodyszczce, 30 miles northeast of Rowno 1837-74. Coming from the Polish villages of Urszulin and Michelsdorf (q.v.) in 1837, the group made the move to Horodyszczce because of better farming opportunities. During the same year or soon thereafter twelve families moved from Horodyszczce, beginning the daughter colony at Waldheim. The first baptism at Horodyszczce occurred in 1838. The congregation did not have a church building. Congregational leaders were Jacob Graber, Peter Kaufman, and Joseph Graber. Family names recorded in the church book included Albrecht, Voran, Graber, Kaufman, Flickinger, Prieheim, Gering, Schrag, Stucky, Schwartz, Rysz, Senner, Strausz, and Krehbiel. The congregation at Horodyszczce joined the Waldheim congregation in the emigration to America in 1874. Under the leadership of Elder Peter Kaufman 53 families made the journey to Hutchinson and Turner counties, S.D. M.H.S.

Martin H. Schrag, "European History of the Swiss-Volhynian Mennonite Ancestors of Mennonites now Living in Communities in Kansas and South Dakota" (unpublished master's dissertation, 1956); idem, "The Swiss Volhynian Mennonite Background," Menn. Life IX (October 1954) 156-61.

Huber Mennonite Church (MC), New Carlisle, Ohio, was established in 1863. It had 29 members in 1958. It is located approximately 12 miles northeast of Dayton. Paul R. Yoder is pastor. M.G.

Hueff: see Huf.

Huiuff, Hans, one of the first group of Zürich Anabaptists, a member of the Conrad Grebel circle of 1524-25 and cosigner of the letter to Thomas Müntzer of Sept. 5, 1524, a goldsmith, native of Halle a.d. Saale, Germany. Huiuff was evidently the son of the court goldsmith of Cardinal Albrecht of Mainz. His brother brought some of Müntzer's booklets from Saxony to Zürich, which occasioned the negative attitude of the Grebel circle to Müntzer's revolutionary ideas. Huiuff became a full member of the Anabaptist circle in Zürich, apparently a close friend of Heinrich Aberli, and in fellowship with the Zollikon brotherhood. The Zürich Täuferakten reports that on Dec. 23, 1525, he was haled before court for a hearing and then released from prison. He must have been imprisoned in November with the other Zürich Anabaptists who were arrested in Grüningen. His testimony suggests that he was weakening in his Anabaptism, since he reports having "gone to church" and makes other qualifying statements. H.S.B.

Karl Simon, "Die Züricher Täufer und der Hofgoldschmied Kardinal Albrechts," Zwingliana XI (1934) 50-54; H. S. Bender, Conrad Grebel (Goshen, 1950) 257; TA Zürich.

Hunsicker Group. In 1851 the bishops Abraham Hunsicker and Israel Beidler and the preachers Henry A. Hunsicker and Abraham H. Grater separated from John H. Oberholtzer's Conference in Eastern Pennsylvania (now GCM). "But having a majority of the members and friends, both in Phoenixville and in Germantown to stand by us, we continued our services at both these places until 1875. After the Meeting Houses in Skippack and Providence were closed against us, we held services at school houses, and in some of the neighboring churches opened to us, until 1854 when we built a church at Freeland, now Collegeville, which was essentially a non-sectarian church, to be open for ministers in good standing in our own and other denominations, who chose to help the church of Christ. Our Church, as well as our school, were both flourishing. We added to the Ministry during these years, Francis Hunsicker, Jarret T. Preston, and Joseph H. Hendricks." (Quotation from Henry A. Hunsicker in the 1907 Mennonite Year Book and Almanac, p. 24.)

The church established by the Hunsicker group in 1854 was called the "Trinity Christian Society." In 1888 Hendricks and his church were received into the Reformed Church, which act displeased Henry A. Hunsicker.

The Hunsicker group were for a time known as Reformed Mennonites, at least they were called Reformed Mennonites at Germantown. But this name was already used by a radical sect of Mennonites in Lancaster County, the followers of John Herr, and the "Reformed" Mennonites of Germantown soon became General Conference Mennonites. Indeed the whole Hunsicker group disintegrated. The Collegeville Church became Reformed, the Lutherans acquired the Phoenixville property, and the Germantown Church united with the Eastern District of the General Conference Mennonites. Both Henry A. and Francis R. S. Hunsicker became Presbyterians. J.C.W.

Abraham Hunsicker, A Statement of Facts, and Summary of Views on Morals and Religion, as Related with Suspension from the Mennonite Meeting 1851 (Philadelphia, 1851).

Hydro Mennonite Church (GCM), now extinct, located near the now extinct town of Hydro, Mont., near the Canadian border at the mid-point of the state, was organized in 1914 by some 30 persons who came chiefly from Kansas and Oklahoma. In 1926 the congregation disbanded because of crop failures. P. P. Tschetter served as minister here for three years. H.S.B.

Hymnology (II, 870b, 32): Supplement. In the article Ochsentreiberin (IV), note the following additional comment on Anabaptist singing: "At the same time the magistrate was censured because the prisoners were lodged together, so that they 'with much singing, as they are accustomed to sing in their sect, make themselves heard, which is also listened to publicly by the common man, from which nothing good can come.' Furthermore, this merely strengthened and consoled them, for which reason they were to be consoled at once and placed in solitary confinement."

Iglau (Czech, Jihlava), a city (pop. 23,413) in Moravia, Czechoslovakia. The Anabaptist movement early gained adherents here, but through the influence of Paul Speratus Lutheranism predominated and Anabaptism was suppressed, with actions in 1529, 1536, and 1537. However, scattered individual Anabaptists continued to be found here and toward the end of the century increased in number. The city council then took special action to suppress them, and among others arrested their leader and preacher Hans Springer (q.v.) in 1592, and cruelly executed him. W.W.

A. Altrichter, "Zur Geschichte der Wiedertäufer in Iglau," Ztscht des deutschen Vereins für die Geschichte Mährens und Schlesiens (1928) 157 f.

I.H.V.P.N.: see Beginsel.

IJzenbeek: see Ysenbeek.

Immanuel Mennonite Church (GCM), Meadow Lake, Sask., organized in 1930 and reorganized in 1948, had 77 members in 1958, with Peter B. Friesen as pastor. Besides Meadow Lake it has four other meeting places—Beaverdale, Daisy Meadow, Compass, and Pierceland. M.G.

Immeli, Jakob (c1495-1543), one of the assistants to Oecolampadius (q.v.), the reformer of Basel, in the disputation of August 1525 with the Swiss Brethren. Immeli, who was dean of the arts faculty of the University of Basel in 1522, served as pastor of St. Ulrich's in Basel from May 1523 to February 1525, later at other points near Basel. H.S.B.

Immersion (III, 15 f.): Supplement. Frank Wray's discovery that Pilgram Marpeck used almost two thirds of Rothmann's (q.v.) Bekentnisse as a basis for his Vermanung (q.v.) throws some further light on the form of baptism used by the Anabaptists in South Germany. Rothmann only once refers to baptism as "waterbesprengung," and prefers terminology which describes baptism as immersion. In contrast Marpeck (with one exception) always adds (at least twelve times) to Rothmann's immersion terminology the phrase "or water poured over him" or similar phrases. Marpeck simply deletes Rothmann's assertion, "Everyone knows well that baptizing means to put under or to thrust into the water." At only one place does Marpeck refer to baptism as immersion (einduncken), viz., in the Verantwortung where he is defending the description given in the Vermanung. The evidence indicates strongly that Marpeck's brotherhood baptized by pouring.

However, Rothmann's writing is not to be interpreted as meaning that the Münsterites used immersion as their mode of baptism. Cornelius Krahn, who examined all the sources carefully, shows that pouring was the mode practiced. Gresbeck, an eyewitness, states that Jan van Leiden said in his trial that they baptized by using "a little water upon the head" (Cornelius).

Wiswedel's article on Silesia (q.v.) states that in the town of Habelschwerdt "immersion was apparently practiced" by the Anabaptists, quoting an unnamed source as follows: "For them the whole city was a temple; in private homes of citizens they held their meetings. The Neisse and the Weistritz were the great baptistries, into which adults were immersed and made members of their covenant."

The group at Surhuisterveen, Holland, which practiced immersion, was not Mennonite (see III, 15b) but followers of Alexander Mack, founder of the Church of the Brethren. W.K.L.

Cornelius Krahn, Menno Simons (Karlsruhe, 1936) 136-38; C. A. Cornelius, Berichte der Augenzeugen über das Münsterische Wiedertäuferreich (Münster, 1853) 370; Kühler, Geschiedenis, 83.

Independents, a term used in English church history to refer to the first congregation of English Protestants who withdrew from the Church of England to become independent. They were later called Congregationalists (q.v.). They were also called Brownists for a time after Robert Browne, whose congregation in London in 1580 became the first independent congregation. For the relation of the Congregationalists to the Mennonites see Brownists.
H.S.B.

Indiana (or Miller) Amish Mennonite Church in Logan and Champaign counties, Ohio, now extinct, developed about 1883 as a result of the refusal of the Walnut Grove and Oak Grove congregations to allow the use of a parlor organ in the home of a member and the use of the English language in Sunday school. Bishop Eli Miller of the Clinton Frame A.M. congregation in Elkhart County, Ind., organized the congregation and ordained Samuel H. Detweiler and John H. Kauffman as bishop and minister, who were accepted as members of the Indiana A.M. Conference. No meetinghouse was ever built; the group used the Oak Grove and Walnut Grove meetinghouses on the alternate Sundays when the regular congregation did not meet. Leading Sunday-school workers at Walnut Grove were D. D. Yoder, Detweiler and Kauffman, and the John Fett family, and at Oak Grove the Hooley brothers, Levi and Jonas. Soon after 1890 the Hooley brothers organized one of the earliest Ohio Young People's Bible Meetings. The congregation never prospered and when the Bethel Mennonite Church was organized at West Liberty in 1895 the remaining active members joined it.
J.S.U.

Indiana-Michigan Mennonite Camp Association, Inc. (MC), founded 1956, owns and operates the Perin Lakes Camp, established in 1957, located 5 miles north of Sturgis, Mich., near Burr Oak. It is sponsored by the Indiana-Michigan Christian Workers' Conference but controlled by a board of directors appointed by the shareholders.
H.S.B.

Instituto Biblico Menonita (MC), at La Plata, Puerto Rico, was established in 1955 by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities as a training school for Christian workers in Puerto Rico.
H.S.B.

Intercollegiate (Mennonite) Peace Fellowship, representing the peace societies or interest groups of the Mennonite and affiliated colleges, was organized in 1948 under the sponsorship of the MCC Peace Section (q.v.), with later additional sponsorship by the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges (q.v.). It provides an annual meeting at one of the colleges, occasionally conducts a seminar (e.g., at Washington, D.C., and at the United Nations in New York), and publishes Peace Notes as an organ.
H.S.B.

Inthie Claesdochter, of Wier, and Intte, Jan Eysens' widow, Anabaptist martyrs, apprehended at the recapture of the Oldeklooster (q.v.) and both drowned at Leeuwarden, capital of Friesland, on April 14, 1535. (Vos, Menno Simons, 229.)

vdZ.

Invalid-Funds (Invaliditeitsfondsen, i.e., a fund for the pensioning of disabled ministers in the Netherlands). Soon after the ministry in the Netherlands had become a full-time occupation, foundations were established for the pensioning of retired ministers and their widows (see Algemeen Emeritaatsfonds and Pensioenfonds), and usually also for invalid ministers. Groningen Conference founded a separate Invalid Fund in 1917.
vdZ.

Iowa Experiment of the Stauffer Mennonite Church in Osceola County (1887-1915). Stauffer (q.v.) Mennonites from Ontario and from Lancaster and Snyder counties, Pa., established a settlement in the frontier country of northwestern Iowa where they could be isolated from the influence of Mennonite churches from which they had separated. Their settlement became extinct because of differences of opinion among the members concerning the introduction of modern conveniences and because of the great economic success of their bishop which led him into compromises disapproved by his members.
M.G.

Iowa Valley Mennonite Church (MC), Lone Tree, Ia., began as a mission in 1949 and was organized as a congregation in 1952. In 1958 the membership numbered 33, with Henry M. Yoder as pastor. The congregation worships in the community-owned Swank Church.
M.G.

Iroquois (S.D.) Church of God in Christ Mennonite Church is located 4 miles north and 1 mile east of Iroquois. It had a membership of 37 in 1959, with Harvey Yost as minister. The congregation was first listed in the Yearbook (CGC) for 1955.
M.G.

Israel Mennonite Mission (MC) was founded in 1953 as a joint work by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, the Eastern M.B. of M. & C., and the Virginia M.B. of M. & C. In 1958 there were four missionaries located at Ramat Gan.
H.S.B.

Jan Quirinsz: see Quirijn Jansz.

Janson: see Janzen.

Japan Mennonite Mission (MC): see Japan.

Jefferson Street Mennonite Church, Lima, Ohio: see Lima Mission.

Jewish Evangelism. In his earliest writing, against the "Blasphemy of John of Leiden" (1535), Menno Simons expresses the conviction that "Israel is yet to be converted unto Christ," basing this on Rom. 11:26 and Isa. 59:20 (Writings, 38). While neither he nor any other early Anabaptists are known to have made any special effort to win the Jews to Christ, such an interest has developed in this century, particularly among American Mennonites. In the Mennonite Church (MC) the pioneer in Jewish evangelism seems to have been Martin Z. Miller of Elizabethtown, Pa., who after informally witnessing for about 20 years, was appointed (1933) by the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities as a worker among Israel. Work of a rather permanent nature has since been undertaken not only by this board in Philadelphia and Washington, D.C., but also (1940) by the Pacific Coast Mission Board in Portland, Ore., and (1951) by the General Mission Board (Elkhart) in New York City. In 1953 Roy and Florence Kreider were sent by a committee representing the Elkhart, Eastern, and Virginia mission boards to open the first Mennonite mission in Israel, now located at Ramat Gan, near Tel Aviv.

In Ontario five Mennonite groups co-operate in sponsoring a Hebrew Mission, located since 1957 in Toronto. An earlier (1920) joint enterprise in Chicago, sponsored by the General Conference Mennonites, Defenseless Mennonites, and Central Conference Mennonites, was given up after three years. Other attempts at Jewish evangelism, e.g., in the Ohio, Virginia, and Franconia conference districts (MC), also failed to develop into a permanent work. It is a difficult field for all denominations. Not only do Jews tend to persist in their historic repudiation of Jesus as Christ, but there are also problems in the integration of peoples who have been so long apart. There are at present a small number of Hebrew Christians in the Mennonite brotherhood. C.Y.F.

Ed. G. Kaufman, The Development of the Missionary and Philanthropic Interest Among the Mennonites of North America (Berne, 1931) 127; J. Paul Graybill, Jewish Evangelism (Lancaster, 1950) 33, 34.

Joachim de Suickerbacker: see Joachim Vermeeren.

Johann von Orvall, an Anabaptist martyr, was drowned in the Rhine on Nov. 29, 1561, at Cologne: see Orvel.

Johnson, Elmer Ellsworth Schultz (1872-1959), pastor, educator, historian, was born June 26, 1872, at New Berlinville, Pa., attended Perkiomen Seminary, Pennsburg (1893-95); Princeton University (1895-99); and Hartford Theological Seminary (1899-1902, B.D.; Ph.D., 1911). He was pastor of the Hereford Mennonite Church, Bally, Pa., 1921-47; Professor of Church History, Hartford Theological Seminary, 1922-43; director of the Schwenckfelder Historical Library, Pennsburg, 1919 ff.; and editor of the Corpus Schwenckfeldianorum 1904-59.

Johnson was an outstanding scholar whose major contribution besides his monumental work of editing the Corpus was the building up of the Schwenckfelder Library, which contains primarily all valuable material pertaining to the Schwenckfelder movement, but also some Anabaptist and Mennonite materials which he collected and purchased abroad and in Pennsylvania. Johnson's ancestry was both Mennonite and Schwenckfelder, and he served both denominations throughout his life, but his membership was in the Schwenckfeld Church at Palm, Pa. He died May 15, 1959. C.K.

Johnsville Conservative Mennonite Church is located in the village of Shauck, Ohio, midway between Mansfield and Mt. Gilead, on U.S. Route 42. The congregation was established in 1951 and had 41 members in 1959, with Ray F. Miller as bishop. M.G.

Joseph II (1741-90), Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, was a uniquely progressive Hapsburg ruler.

His emphatic reform ideas harmonized with the Enlightenment philosophers, whose (esp. Voltaire's) dedicated student he was (see Emancipation). Frederick II of Prussia (q.v.) and Czarina Catherine (q.v.) of Russia had provided patterns for Joseph's policies designed to induce settlers to come to his lands. Joseph's imperial objectives included attempts to redress long and complicated grievances in law and law court procedures. These efforts, incidentally, brought up the local privileges as regards the Mennonite position on the oath. Refreshingly sound views were aired. (See the discussion by Crous.)

The death of Maria Theresa in 1780 made Joseph the uncontested ruler. Eager to apply reason and enlightenment to the power of state he issued on Oct. 13, 1781, a Toleranz-Patent granting freedom to the Greek Orthodox and Protestant confessions. Parallel to Catherine's 1763 Manifesto inviting German farmers to Russia, he issued on Sept. 17, 1781, the "Kolonisten-Patent" opening his eastern provinces to immigrants. This law attracted a number of Palatinate Mennonite families into Galicia (q.v.). The decree of acceptance (Annahmedekret) for the Palatine group was handed down on March 29, 1784. Alsatian Amish followed from Montbéliard (q.v.). The 1781 events mark a memorable chapter of Joseph's reforms. They reveal him as a just benefactor to Mennonites and other Protestants. His toleration patent brought relief to them and provided an escape avenue far less troublesome than the passage to the New World. E.H.C.

Ernst Crous, "Mennoniten im alten Reich u. Staat," Die Heimat (Krefeld, 1939) Part I: "Reichskammergericht und Mennoniten," 1-8: "Wie es mit Ablegung des juramenti calumniae und sonstiger Eyden in Streit-sachen der Mennonisten zu halten seye?" discussed at Wetzlar, July 13, 1768, by the Visitations-Kommission (Imperial Law Revision Commission) relating to commercial cases. With reference to Mennonite immigration into the Austrian dominions see the bibliography under "Galicia"; also Viktor Kauder, Das Deutschtum in Polen 2. Teil: Das Deutschtum in Galizien (=Kleinpolen) 1937. For recent literature see R. Blaas, "Die K. K. Agentie f. Geistl. Angelegenheiten, 1730-1918" Mitteilungen Oesterr. Staatsarchiv, 1954, 47-89; Ferdinand Maass, "Maria Theresia u. der Josephinismus" in Ztscht f. Katholische Theologie, 1957, 201-13.

Josephus, Flavius (A.D. 37-95), Jewish historian who turned Roman and became a friend of several emperors. His two most renowned works are The Jewish War and Jewish Antiquities, both favorite readings in Protestant circles. The Jewish War contains a detailed description of the War between the Jews and Romans A.D. 66-70 as seen from the Roman camp, in particular the story of the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, of which Josephus had been an eyewitness. The book was translated into German and Dutch rather early in the 16th century and seems to have been widely studied. Bible-oriented Anabaptists naturally were eager to learn all about the prophesied fall of the great city, as well as about the life of the Jews before and after Christ's earthly career. Thus Josephus became as popular as a devotional reader among Anabaptists and Mennonites as Eusebius (q.v.).

In a Hutterite codex of 1592 (now Bratislava City Library, Msc, no. 10, formerly Bratislava no. 215, with Beck Cod. XIV) there is a hymn entitled:

"Von der Zerstörung der Stadt Jerusalem, aus Josephus, dem Geschichtsschreiber, reimweis gestellt durch Hans Rogolin." No Rogolin is known, but only a hymnwriter Rogel (q.v.), one of whose hymns is found in the Ausbund. Most likely it is this Rogel, a schoolteacher of Augsburg, who composed this hymn. How it came into a Hutterite codex is not known.

The other instance of use of Josephus is Schabclje's (q.v.) well-known book Wandelnde Seele (1635), a devotional reader composed of three interviews of the wandering soul through the ages. The third and last interview is with a certain Simon Cleophas, an eyewitness of the fall of Jerusalem. Obviously the material for this imagined interview was taken from Josephus. The popularity of this book was instrumental in making Josephus' story widely known among the Dutch and later German Mennonites. Modern Hutterites also read Josephus, as this writer found upon visiting their homes.

R.F.

Julesburg (Col.) Mennonite Church (MC) was established in 1958 by a group who withdrew from the near-by Chappell (Neb.) Mennonite Church, and built a meetinghouse in Julesburg. It had 23 members in 1958, with John Roth as pastor. It is a member of the Iowa-Nebraska Conference.

M.G.

Kalona Mennonite Church (MC), Kalona, Ia., was organized in July 1958. Two years earlier the Baptist church building, then vacated, was rented to the East Union (q.v.) Mennonite Church for a year and services were begun as a branch of the mother congregation which was becoming somewhat crowded. It was served by the East Union ministers for several years, but is now an organized congregation in the Iowa-Nebraska Conference. The charter membership was 130, with Eugene Garber as licensed minister.

A.L.S.

Kanker Mennonite Church (MC), Kanker, M.P., India, was organized in 1953. It had 58 members in 1958, with Pyrelal J. Malagar as bishop and Simon Singh as pastor.

M.G.

Kansas City (Mo.) Mennonite Fellowship (MC) was organized in 1957. Its meetinghouse, a remodeled tavern, was dedicated in 1958 at 2500 Holmes Street. The congregation, the outgrowth of a Voluntary Service unit, in 1959 had 58 members, with Roman Stutzman as licensed pastor. H.S.B.

Kansas Volksblatt, Das, was first published by W. J. Krehbiel and David Goerz about 1897. In April 1899, the Newton Kansan Company bought the Kansas Volksblatt from W. J. Krehbiel, and D. R. Krehbiel became its editor. It was then sold to the Western Book and Publishing Company (q.v.) in April 1901; in the following year it was combined with the Hillsboro Post and called Post und Volksblatt (q.v.).

J.F.S.

Newton Kansan, Fiftieth Anniversary number. "Minute Book, The Western Book and Publishing Company."

Kargel, Johann (c1846-1933), a leader of the Russian Baptists and later of the Evangelical Christians, was the son of a German father and an Armenian mother (birthplace unknown), came to Russia from Bulgaria, which was then under Turkish rule, and thus had Turkish citizenship. He worked at first among the Baptists in the Ukraine, later in St. Petersburg among the Evangelical Christians. He was for a time a friend and co-worker with Johann Wieler (q.v.) of the Mennonite Brethren, and with him served as chairman of the first Ukrainian Baptist Conference at Novovassilevka in the Molotschna, April 30-May 1, 1884. For many years he was the interpreter for F. W. Baedeker (q.v.) on his Russian evangelistic tours.

H.S.B.

W. Gutsche, Westliche Quellen des russischen Stundismus (Kassel, 1956) 66 f.

Kasper, a painter: see Färber, Kaspar, and Kaspar.

Kelowna (B.C.) First Mennonite Church (GCM) organized in July 1947 and built its church in 1951. The membership in 1957 was 45. In 1959 the minister in charge of the congregation was John P. Vogt. He was assisted by Jacob A. Janzen and Jacob H. Enns.

M.G.

Kernstown (Va.) Mennonite Church: see Winchester (Va.) Mennonite Church.

Kingview Mennonite Church (MC), in East Scott-dale, Pa., a member of the Allegheny Conference, begun as a mission Sunday school in 1906, was organized as a congregation in January 1955. In 1958 it had 59 members, with Edwin Alderfer as pastor. The meetinghouse was built in 1952.

H.S.B.

Kiowa County Memorial Hospital, Greensburg, Kan., built by the community in 1950, has been operated by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities (MC) since 1954.

H.S.B.

Kishacoquillas Valley, Mifflin Co., Pa., is the beautiful valley of the Kishacoquillas Creek extending 26 miles from Mill Creek on the southwest to Reesville on the northeast, between Stone Mountain (west side) and Jacks Mountain (east side), at its widest point some 4 miles across. The chief towns in the valley are Allensville and Belleville. In the c160 years since the first Amishmen came to the valley the Amish and their descendants have built solid communities, until in 1959 there were approximately 1500 baptized members, distributed among 12 congregations. (See Mifflin County.)

H.S.B.

S. W. Peachey, Amish of Kishacoquillas Valley (Scott-dale, 1930).

Kissling, Hans: see Kiessling, Hans.

Kleinmichel: see Matschidl, Michael.

Klein-Werder: see Marienburg Werder.

Kliewer, Jakob (1743-1827), elder of the Frisian Mennonite Church of Danzig from 1798, was born Jan. 7, 1743. He continued in this capacity as co-elder with Peter Tiessen (q.v.) when the Flemish and Frisian congregations united in 1808. He died Oct. 5, 1827. After his death and the death of Peter Tiessen, Jacob van der Smissen (q.v.) became elder and the change from the lay ministry to the theologically trained ministry was completed. C.K.

H. G. Mannhardt, Die Danziger Mennonitengemeinde (Danzig, 1919) 141, 157.

Knollys Society, Hanserd, named after an English Baptist leader by that name who lived 1599?-1691, was organized in 1845 in London for the reprinting of early Baptist writings and the publication of original records. It dissolved after issuing ten volumes, two of which were an English translation of pp. 1-371 of the second part of the 1685 Dutch edition of van Braght's Martyrs' Mirror, edited by Edward Bean Underhill. The issue bore the title, A Martyrology of the Churches of Christ, Commonly Called Baptist, during the Era of the Reformation (London, printed for the Society by J. Haddon, 1850, 1853). H.S.B.

Konferenz: see Conference.

Kouts (Ind.) Mennonite Church (GCM), now extinct, was organized in 1918 with 9 members and joined the Central Mennonite Conference (q.v.) in that year. Its high point of membership was 42 in 1944. A. D. Egli, the first minister, served 1918-32. The group never had a meetinghouse of its own. H.S.B.

Kraemer, Gustav (1863-1948), born at Wissen an der Sieg (district Koblenz), Germany, first a Protestant state church pastor, 1887-90, at Düsseldorf-Gerresheim in a metropolitan congregation, and 1892-1901 at Dachwig (district of Erfurt) in a village congregation, then served as Mennonite pastor in Crefeld (q.v.) 1903-36 and for several additional years during World War II as substitute for his successor Dirk Cattepoel. His health was never robust. His sermons attracted Mennonites and others, in Crefeld and Neuwied (q.v.), in Hanover (q.v.) and Berlin (q.v.), and in 1942 also in Heubuden (q.v.). In 1905-48 he published the Monatsblätter der (altewangelischen) Mennonitengemeinde(n) Crefeld (und Emden). He took care of the dying congregations of Cleve (q.v.) and Goch (q.v.). From 1908 he represented his congregation in the Vereinigung (q.v.) and has to his credit particularly the organization of the Prediger-Ruhegehalts-Kasse (Ministers' Pension Foundation). E.C.

Kroeker, Peter M. (1840-1915), a Mennonite (Kleine Gemeinde) leader, was born June 20, 1840, in Russia, the youngest of the six children of Franz Kroeker (1799-1853). His mother was a Martens, born 1798 in Prussia, and died 1861 in Russia. Peter M. Kroeker's wife was a Braun. Three sons and three daughters were born to them: Margaretha (Mrs. Abram D. Loewen), Anna (Mrs. Cornelius J. Loewen), Peter B. Kroeker, Franz B. Kroeker, and Jakob B. Kroeker. All three of his sons and one of his older brothers became ministers of the church. Peter M. Kroeker was ordained as minister at Borozenko, Nikopol, in 1871. In 1874 the family migrated to Canada and settled in Rosenort, near Morris, Manitoba. In 1878, when P. Toews with the other ministers and part of the church joined the Church of God in Christ (Mennonite), only Peter Kroeker, his brother Franz Kroeker, and Peter Baerg, near Steinbach, remained as ministers with the Kleine Gemeinde. Peter officiated as elder for approximately 30 years. He died April 15, 1915. D.P.R.

Kuchenbecker, Hans (Pauli), of Hatzbach near Marburg, Hesse, a leader among the Anabaptists in Hesse in the last quarter of the 16th century. He came to Hatzbach c1570, after having earlier lived in Treysa and Homberg, driven from both places because of his Anabaptism. When called before the court at Marburg on Feb. 5, 1577, he freely confessed his faith. In a document of Feb. 17, 1577, he is called "their captain and head, who teaches and preaches for them," although he denied being a preacher and said only that "when they get together they speak together about their faith." Later (examination in June 1578) he admitted preaching at the Anabaptist meetings and justified it. He said at the same time "he and his brethren were Swiss Brethren, they were not agreed with those in Bohemia"; he had been baptized 10 years earlier (1568) by brethren at the Rhine. His testimony on this occasion is very significant material. Nothing further appears in the Hesse records about Kuchenbecker. In 1587 he was still active, however, since TA Hessen prints a brief letter from a Moravian elder, Hans Miller of Stignitz, to "Kuchen Hanssn, who is a Swiss minister." (TA Hessen.) H.S.B.

Kulak (Russian word meaning fist), a term introduced during the days of Stalin's rigid collectivization after Lenin's death. Its origin, however, may go back to an earlier date. It refers to the middle class of the peasant society which was blamed for the delay of the collectivization and socialization process within the Soviet system. The kulaks were sent into exile in great numbers as a warning example and to speed up the realization of the Soviet policies. The Mennonites belonging to the middle class were particularly affected by this process. (See also Concentration Camps, Russia.) C.K.

Kurgan district and city are located on the Trans-Siberian Railroad in Asiatic Soviet Russia. This region was established during World War II out of the eastern part of the Chelyabinsk district (q.v.), with the city of Kurgan as capital. It is bounded on the east and south by the Kazakh S.S.R. Some Mennonites who were exiled before and during World War II are located in this region. (See Siberia.) C.K.

Kurland, a former Russian province on the eastern shore of the Baltic, now constitutes the Kurzeme and Zemgale provinces of the Latvian S.S.R. According to Friesen, there was a Kurland Mennonite Church before World War I. The members, scattered over various districts, received permission to organize a congregation in 1902. In that year the elder was Johann Wollberg and the congregation consisted of 10 families, 38 members, with a total of 61 persons. The value of the property estimated for the purpose of establishing support due for Mennonite forestry service was 15,000 rubles. It is not known what happened to these Mennonites. They were evidently Prussian Mennonites who had moved into the Baltic area. (Friesen, Brüderschaft, 691, 720.) C.K.

La Tena Church of God in Christ Mennonite Church, Chihuahua, Mex., had a membership of 21 in 1959, with Henry B. Koehn as minister. Since 1947 the mission had been listed under Agua Nueva, Saltillo, and La Junta, but since 1957 at La Tena. M.G.

Lake Winnipeg Mission Camp, located on Lake Winnipeg, 70 miles north of the city of Winnipeg, Man., started in 1948, is owned and controlled by a private corporation of members of the M.B. church. F.C.P.

Lambert, George (1853-1928), Mennonite Brethren in Christ minister, was born in Northampton County, Pa., May 11, 1853, the son of David and Catherine Lambert. In 1872 he married Amanda Gehman, daughter of William Gehman of Vera Cruz, Pa. They had eight children, one of whom, Rose, was a missionary at Hadjin, Turkey, for a time. In 1878 he entered the ministry of the M.B.C. Church (ord. 1881), holding pastorates in Kent County, Mich., and in Elkhart County, Ind.—at Southwest, Wakarusa, Bethel, and Jamestown. In 1896 he transferred his membership to the Mennonite Church (MC) at Prairie St., Elkhart, Ind., and in 1898 moved to Elkhart, where he resided until his death on June 30, 1928. He was the agent for the Home and Foreign Relief Commission (q.v.) in taking a shipload of wheat to India at the time of the great famine in 1898, which led to the founding of the Mennonite (MC) Mission in India. He wrote Around the Globe and Through Bible Lands (Elkhart, 1896) and India, the Horror-Stricken Empire, Containing a Full Account of the Famine, Plague, and Earthquake of 1896-97. Including a Complete Narration of the Relief Work Through the Home and Foreign Relief Commission (Berne, 1898). H.S.B.

Lambsheim, a village about 6 miles northwest of Ludwigshafen in the Palatinate, Germany, which Christian Hege assumes to be identical with "Lambesheim," an Anabaptist congregation, whose representatives signed the Concept of Cologne (q.v.) of 1591. H.S.B.

Chr. Hege, Täufer in der Kurpfalz (Karlsruhe, 1908).

Landmannschaft der Deutschen aus Russland, with headquarters at Staffenbergstrasse 66, Stuttgart, Germany, an organization of former residents of Russia of German background, including Mennonites, aims to give legal, cultural, and economic advice to those who are in need of this help. The organization maintains a list and addresses of such residents of Russia. It publishes the monthly paper Volk auf dem Weg and the annual Heimatbuch der Deutschen aus Russland. The 1959 and earlier volumes contain highly significant articles pertaining to German settlements in Russia, biographical sketches of leaders, many significant maps, and a bibliography of the German element in Russia. Most of this information has significant bearing on Mennonite research. C.K.

Larned (Kan.) Mennonite Church (MC): see Pleasant View Mennonite Church, Larned (Supplement).

Lashburn (Sask.) Mennonite Brethren Church is located in town on Highway 5 about 150 miles northwest of Saskatoon. The church was organized with 5 members in 1936. It had 23 members in 1957, with A. H. Dueck as leader. He.J.W.

Latschar Mennonite Church (MC), located near the small village of Manheim, Waterloo County, Ont., some 6 miles west of Kitchener, was organized c1832. The first meetinghouse, of logs, was built in 1839 on land conveyed by Isaac Latschar. A stone structure replaced it in 1853, followed by a brick church in 1908, enlarged in 1923. The first-known minister was Jacob Hallman (1803-78), who came from Montgomery County, Pa., in 1822. He was probably ordained in 1836. An outstanding minister was Moses S. Bowman (1819-98), ordained in 1859, who began a Sunday school in 1874. Manasseh Hallman, a grandson of Jacob, was ordained preacher in 1907 and bishop in 1910. In 1958 the membership was 135, with Osiah Horst as pastor. H.S.B.

Laurel Street Mennonite Church (MC) is located at Laurel and Fremont Streets, Lancaster, Pa. It is the outgrowth of a mission started in 1945 on Groff Avenue, which moved to the present location in 1947. It is now an organized congregation; it had 37 members in 1958, with Ira Nafziger as pastor. I.D.L.

Laurens de Schoenmaker: see Schu(e)ster, Lorenz.

Lawrenz Schuster: see Schu(e)ster, Lorenz.

Lebanon (Ore.) Community Hospital, built by the community in 1948 (1922), has been administered by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities (MC) since its construction. H.S.B.

Lebanon (Ore.) Mennonite Church (MC), located at 2100 South Second Street, was organized in 1957 and its new church was dedicated in 1958. George M. Kauffman was the pastor of its 38 members in 1959. M.G.

Leendertz (II, 306): Supplement. Willem Leendertz (b. 1883) was pastor at Nes 1909-22, obtained the Th.D. degree in 1913 with a dissertation on Sören Kierkegaard published at Amsterdam in 1913. From 1946 to 1953 he was professor at the Amsterdam University and at the Mennonite Seminary, where he had been lecturer since 1934. His field was philosophy, ethics, and dogmatics. He wrote numerous scholarly books and articles. His brother Joannes Mathias (b. 1885) was pastor at Wieringen 1910-23, Koog-Zaandijk 1923-27, and Haarlem 1927-50. He served for many years on the executive committee of the Dutch Mennonite Mission Association, was among the founders in 1917 of the Gemeentedag (q.v.) movement, and an early and active member of the Dutch Mennonite peace group.

Lelie, De, a few houses on Bloemstraat at Amsterdam, Holland, since the 18th century used as living quarters for aged members of the Amsterdam Mennonite congregation. There is room for four married couples and four unattached women.

vdZ.

Letter of Intercession: see William of Orange.

Leutesdorf, a town on the west side of the Rhine, some 5 miles from Neuwied, location of the Mennonite Home for the Aged, Marienburg, and the grave of C. F. Klassen (q.v., d. 1954) which is located in the cemetery attached to the home. H.S.B.

Leuven (Louvain), a town in Belgium (1949 pop. 37,220), the seat of a Catholic university, which in the 16th century was a bulwark of Catholic orthodoxy, watching all kinds of heresy. Its theological faculty had eleven books by Erasmus (q.v.) put on the Index. A number of Dutch inquisitors fighting the Reformation, some of whom were very active against Anabaptism and Mennonitism, were educated at the Leuven university.

In Leuven there are but scant traces of Anabaptism: Anthoinette van Rosmers, executed at Leuven in 1543, who is said to have been an Anabaptist, was in fact Lutheran. Lemken (q.v.) is said to have preached here, but if this is true his results were insignificant. The eight persons burned at the stake at Leuven in January 1526 were apparently Sacramentists (q.v.).
vdZ.

W. Bax, Het Protestantisme in het Bisdom Luik . . . I (The Hague, 1941) passim; L. E. Halkin, La Réforme en Belgique sous Charles-Quint (Brussels, n.d., 1957) 44.

Licht und Hoffnung, a 32-page 8 x 10½ in. monthly journal established by J. A. Sprunger (q.v.) in 1893 and edited and published by him until his death in 1911, then by his widow until her death in 1934. Vol. IV, No. 2, indicates that it was printed by the Mennonite Publishing Company at Elkhart, Ind., but the place of publication was Chicago, Ill. Sprunger at that time operated a rescue mission at the southwest corner of Harrison Street and May Street. The content of this number indicates that the journal represented a type of piety tinged with what later became known as "holiness" or "pentecostal," and also promoted a deaconess hospital in Cleveland and the support of Armenian orphans. It professed to be nondenominational. H.S.B.

Liège (III, 341): Supplement. Among the fifteen craftsmen who were banished from Liège in 1533 for heresy and the 36 others who were pardoned, there were undoubtedly some Anabaptists. In the same year (1533) Jean Bomeromenus, a book printer, Lambert van Buren, and Jean Stordeur (q.v.), who are indicated as Anabaptists, saved their lives by leaving Liège. Hans Zurelius, a book printer who fled to Strasbourg c1538 and later to Ulm, where he collaborated with Sebastian Franck (q.v.), was an Anabaptist.

L. E. Halkin, La Réforme en Belgique sous Charles-Quint (Brussels, n.d.-1957) 53, 81, 83, 84 f.

Light and Hope, a 16-page 8 x 10 in. monthly nondenominational journal edited and published by J. A. Sprunger (Light and Hope Publishing Co., q.v.), first number apparently January 1901. It was published at Cleveland, Ohio, and later at Birmingham, Ohio. The date of the last number is not known, but the journal was still appearing in April 1909.

H.S.B.

Light and Hope Missionary Society was established by J. A. Sprunger (q.v., 1852-1911) at Berne, Ind., in 1893, as the agency to own and operate the Light and Hope Orphanage (q.v.), and a deaconess training school. His Light and Hope Publishing Co. (q.v.), established in 1898 at Berne, was a separate though parallel organization. H.S.B.

Light and Hope Orphanage, founded by J. A. Sprunger and operated by the Light and Hope Missionary Society, was opened April 1, 1893, at Berne, Ind. In 1901 the orphanage was moved to a location 2 miles northeast of the village of Birmingham, Ohio, 10 miles northwest of Oberlin, where some 550 acres were bought and substantial buildings erected. This institution became the headquarters for the Light and Hope Missionary Society with its deaconess training school. Its capacity was 125-50 persons. The school for the institution employed four teachers. The Light and Hope Publishing Company was also located here with its print shop, publishing the two journals, Licht und Hoffnung and Light and Hope, the promotional journals which raised finances for the whole complex of Light and Hope enterprises, as well as a series of books, some by Sprunger himself. A hospital was also operated in Cleveland. Upon the death of Sprunger in 1911, the Cleveland and Birmingham properties were sold and Mrs. Sprunger moved back to Berne. H.S.B.

Light and Hope Publishing Company was founded about 1898 by J. A. Sprunger, a Mennonite minister living at Berne, Ind., who had been ordained in Switzerland in 1890, but was a member of the Berne Mennonite (GCM) Church. He was very close to the newly formed Missionary Church Association (q.v.) about the same time. The company published the journal Licht und Hoffnung (q.v.) and the English counterpart Light and Hope (q.v.). Sprunger, a wealthy millowner, also operated a deaconess training school and an orphanage by the same name, later also a hospital. Among the workers in both print shop and orphanage in Berne were William Egle, H. C. Barthel, and John Horsch. In 1902 Sprunger moved both the orphanage and the publishing company to Cleveland and soon to Birmingham near Cleveland. Here H. J. Dyck joined the group of workers. Numerous workers from "Light and Hope" went as missionaries to China under the H. C. Barthel mission. Sprunger died in 1911. The print shop was then sold to George Lambert, a minister in the M.B.C. church. It later became the Gospel Herald Publishing Company operated by H. B. Musselman, an M.B.C. minister from Eastern Pennsylvania. Mrs. J. A. Sprunger moved back to Berne upon her husband's death, taking the publishing company and the journal with her, which she owned until her death in 1934. At her death the company and the journal were bought by Christian H. Musselman, who had come to Berne in 1913, and founded there in 1925 the Economy Printing Concern. After Musselman took over the Light and Hope Publishing Company he continued to sell the remaining books of J. A. Sprunger, especially the two-volume work The Gospel in Types (English and German editions), also Outline of Prophecy. In addition he published other volumes of Bible exposition and sermons, in 1950 a reprint edition of the German Martyrs' Mirror and several Mennonite family histories. Musselman was a Mennonite from the Giebelstadt-Würzburg congregation in Germany, who came to Scottdale, Pa., in 1910, and worked in the Mennonite Publishing House until 1913. In 1915 he joined the Missionary Church Association in Berne. He has become in a sense the publisher for the Missionary Church Association. H.S.B.

Limoges, in France, was the seat of a Mennonite congregation known from correspondence of elders from the Jura with Lorenz Friedenreich in Neuwied in 1783-84 to have been established by four families from the Jura district in Switzerland who settled there. It was, however, dissolved some years later when the families moved to Montbéliard and the southern Sundgau. vöZ.

D. L. Gratz, Bernese Anabaptists (Scottdale, 1953) 86.

Lincoln (Neb.) Mennonite Brethren Church was formed April 5, 1959. Services were temporarily held in another church at 1020 S. 15th Street. J. J. Gerbrandt was the interim pastor. H.S.B.

Linn County (Oreg.) Amish Mennonite settlement (now extinct) began in 1898, when several Amish families from Arthur, Ill., settled near Hubbard, with Jonas J. Kauffman as the leading bishop. Several families from Iowa joined the group, including minister Jacob Swartzendruber. The congregation was discontinued in 1907 after Bishop Kauffman died. Many families moved to Yamhill County, and others joined the Zion Mennonite Church at Hubbard. D.E.M.

Logsdan Mennonite Church (MC), one mile west of Logsdan, Ore., was established as a mission by the Sheridan (q.v.) Mennonite Church in 1950. Five years later the Albany church took charge of the Logsdan congregation and in July 1956 it was organized as a church, with 19 charter members. Located in a logging community, where there is a large turnover of population, church membership has fluctuated, but in 1959 there were 41 members of whom 18 were no longer living in the community. Eugene Lemons was serving as the licensed pastor of the congregation. M.G.

London (England) (III, 387 f.): Supplement. A Mennonite center was established in London in 1944 at 68 Shepherd's Hill by the Mennonite Central Committee which had been engaged in a modest program of relief and social service in England since May 1949. Besides serving as headquarters for the "Director of Relief in the European Area" (Glen Miller, May 1940-Feb., 1945; Sam Goering 1945, Howard Yoder 1945-46), it was the base for some clothing distribution. In Sept., 1946, the center was turned over to the Brethren Service Committee, and the MCC European headquarters was moved to Amsterdam and then to Basel, Switzerland. John E. Coffman, who had served as an MCC worker in England since 1940, stayed on in London after the closing of the center, serving in a local mission. From 1948 he has served as the London agent of the Menno Travel Service (q.v.). In 1952 the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities (MC) established a Mennonite center for religious work in London, which has been located at 14 Shepherd's Hill since 1954. Quintus Leatherman has been the minister in charge, but no congregation is contemplated. In 1954 the Mission Board opened direct mission work at the Free Gospel Hall, 39 Grafton Terrace, with John E. Coffman as pastor. In 1958 the membership here was 10.

Lost Creek Mennonite Church (MC), Hicksville, Ohio, located 2 miles west of Farmer, on Highway 249, is a member of the Ohio and Eastern Conference. It was organized in 1947 and worships in a former Presbyterian church. The membership in 1959 was 40, with Ralph Yoder as pastor. M.G.

Lost Creek Mennonite Church (MC), in the Lancaster Conference, is located one mile south of Oakland Mills, Juniata County, Pa. Mennonite families named Musser, Sherck, Shellenberger, and Funk moved into this locality in the late 18th century and by 1819 had a log meetinghouse for worship and school. After a few enlargements a new brick structure was built in 1869. A large old cemetery adjoins the church. This was the home congregation of Bishop Jacob Graybill, and preachers Michael Funk, Christian Auker, Henry Shelley, Samuel Gehman Sr. and Jr., Jacob Kurtz, William Graybill, and William Sieber. Sunday school was opened in 1891. The congregation is a part of the Delaware Circuit. The membership in 1958 was 97, with Raymond Lauver as minister. I.D.L.

Lost Creek School, located 1½ miles west of Ophir in Morgan County, Ky., where Mennonites (MC) under the Virginia Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities conducted regular Sunday services and taught the public school 1943-53. There were two baptized members and four resident workers at Lost Creek at the last report. It was last listed in the 1953 Yearbook and Directory. L.C.S.

Lostwood (N.D.) Mennonite Church (GCM) in Mountrail County, now extinct, was founded in 1923 by five families with 12 charter members, who had settled here from Mountain Lake, Minn., 1916 ff. The meetinghouse was built two miles west of Lostwood in 1923. In 1929 the membership reached its high point with 60. Because of the drought the congregation dissolved in 1937, the families moving mostly to Warroad, Minn., where they organized the Woodland Mennonite Church. H.S.B.

Louvain: see Leuven.

Lower Mennonite Church: see Maple Hill Mennonite Church.

Ludenburg: misspelling of Lundenburg (q.v.).

Lustgärtlein: see Geistliches Lustgärtlein.

Luxembourg-France Mennonite Mission (MC, now called Europe Mennonite Mission), founded in 1951 by the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, in 1958 had two stations in Luxembourg (q.v.) at Esch and Dudelange, one in France at Thionville, and one in Germany at Neumühle bei Landsthal (Palatinate) with 10 workers. The mission co-operates with the small local Mennonite church in Luxembourg, which has its meetinghouse at Rosswinkelhof near Consdorf, canton of Echternach. The mission is one of the very few Protestant efforts in Luxembourg. In 1958 it had five members.

H.S.B.

Lyndside Mennonite Church (MC), Lyndhurst, Va., a member of the Virginia Conference, was organized in 1954 when 24 members and a minister withdrew from the Mountain View (q.v.) congregation. The meetinghouse, built in 1954, is located 4 miles south of Waynesboro and 3 miles south of Lyndhurst. In 1958 the membership was 124, with Silas Brydger as pastor.

H.S.B.

Lyon Street Mennonite Church, Hannibal, Mo.: see Mennonite Mission Church, Hannibal, Mo.

McMahon (Sask.) Mennonite Brethren Church, 25 miles southeast of Swift Current, was organized in the spring of 1927 with 21 members. Jakob Derksen was its first pastor. In 1957 it had 20 members, with H. F. Klassen as pastor.

H.E.J.W.

McMinnville (Tenn.) Evangelical Mennonite Church was established in 1949. It had 12 members in 1957, with Melvin Billings as licensed minister. The founder of this work was Rev. Henry Amstutz, with home missionaries Ellen Hochstetler and Edna Amstutz.

R.SHO.

McPherson (Kan.) First Mennonite Church (GCM), originally a home mission project of the Western District Conference, was organized as a church on July 29, 1945. The church building was dedicated Oct. 30, 1949. Pastors have been Roland P. Goering and Henry W. Goossen, the pastor in 1958, when the membership was 146.

M.G.

Madison Avenue Chapel (MC), Newport News, Va., a Negro mission established by the Warwick River (q.v.) congregation in 1952, changed its name to Calvary in 1958, when it had 10 members, with Nelson Burkholder as pastor.

H.S.B.

Madrid (Neb.) First Mennonite Church (GCM) was organized in 1927 and worships in a meetinghouse purchased from the Methodists in 1928. It had 36 members in 1958 and B. H. Janzen was its pastor.

M.G.

Manitoba Mennonite Historical Society was organized April 25, 1958, to promote the study of Manitoba Mennonite history and collect and preserve materials relating to it.

H.S.B.

Manson (Iowa) Mennonite Church (GCM) was in existence 1904-7, Peter Schantz having the oversight.

Maple Grove Beachy Amish Mennonite Church, located 4 miles east of Sheakleyville, Pa., was organized in 1929. The church was built in 1942. In 1959 the congregation had 51 members, with Valentine P. Yoder serving as its bishop.

M.G.

Maple Grove Conservative Mennonite Church, located 1½ miles south of Hartville, Ohio, was organized in 1922. The meetinghouse is a remodeled schoolhouse which was first used in 1927. In 1958 the membership was 126, with Frank Dutcher as pastor.

H.S.B.

Maple Hill Mennonite Church, formerly known as Lower Mennonite Church, 3½ miles southwest of Wadsworth, Ohio, a member of the Wisler (OOM) Mennonite Conference since 1872, before that of the Ohio Mennonite Conference, originated about 1831. It was one of the two meetinghouses of the congregation established in Medina County by settlers largely from Bucks County, but also from Lancaster County, Pa. From 1830 to 1840 the following preachers arrived in the settlement: William Oberholtzer (1830), Jacob Koppes (1832), Abraham Rohrer (1832), Daniel Kreider (1837 from Ontario), and Samuel Koppes (1840). Abraham Rohrer served as bishop 1834-d.78. The meetinghouse may have been built about 1833 although the oldest deed for the property, assigned to the Mennonite minister, is dated June 30, 1837. A new meetinghouse was built in 1881 and remodeled in 1949.

The Wisler (q.v.) division of 1872 led to the withdrawal of this congregation from the Ohio Conference, although the deacon Jacob Kreider (d. 1896) and some 25 members remained with the Ohio Conference and used the second (Guilford) meetinghouse of the congregation until 1893 (built 1856), when they built the Bethel meetinghouse and became known as the Bethel congregation (q.v.). Later bishops were Isaac L. Good (1841-1917), ordained 1891, and Moses G. Horst (1875-). In the division of 1907 the Maple Hill congregation remained in the Wisler Conference and did not follow the more conservative faction.

In 1959 the membership was 29, with Moses Horst still serving as bishop, and Paul G. Horst and Abram B. Good as ministers. (See Lower Mennonite Church, which this article supplements.)

H.S.B.

Maple Lawn Beachy Amish Mennonite Church, Nappanee, Ind., is located one mile north and one and one-half miles west of town. The congregation was organized in 1940 and its church built in 1943. Its membership was 95 in 1959, with Steve Yoder as bishop.

M.G.

Maria of Monschau: see Montjoie.

Marienburg, the first of the three homes for the aged operated for the care of aged Mennonite refugees from West Prussia by the German Mennonite organization known as Mennonitische Heime e.V. (q.v.), established in 1949 at Leutesdorf a. Rh., about 5 miles down the Rhine from Neuwied on the west bank. With a capacity of some 75, it is self-supporting through a government per capita subsidy aided by MCC food.

H.S.B.

Marlboro (Ohio) Conservative Mennonite Church was organized in 1955. In 1959 the membership was 102, with Jerry S. Miller as pastor-bishop. A remodeled building located in the village of Marlboro was made the meetinghouse in 1955. H.S.B.

Marshall Martin Box Gospel Mennonite Brethren Church is a rural church $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Marshall, Ark. In 1957 it had 52 members, with Floyd Born as pastor. It was founded in 1947 and its church was constructed in 1949. M.G.

Martin Jansen Korendrager: see Maerten Jansz Corendrager.

Matthys, Jan: see Jan Matthijs.

Mayfair Mennonite Church (GCM), Ave. D and 35th St., Saskatoon, Sask., was organized in 1952, and its meetinghouse built in 1958. In 1959 the membership was 174, with Peter G. Sawatzky as pastor. H.S.B.

Maysville Conservative Mennonite Church is located one mile east and one and one-half miles south of Apple Creek, Ohio. It was organized in 1949 and the church was built in 1954. There were 142 members in 1959. Tobias Byler was the bishop and David L. Stutzman and Wilfred J. Neuen-schwander the ministers. M.G.

Meadow Mountain Mennonite Church (MC), Swanton, Md., had its beginning in 1938, when Sunday school and preaching services were begun in a school south of Grantsville. A brick church was constructed in 1948 under the Casselman (q.v.) church. In 1957 Roy L. Kinsinger was the minister of this congregation of 30 members. M.G.

Meadville (Pa.) First Mennonite Church (MC) was organized in 1953 as an independent congregation, after having existed a number of years as a mission under the Ohio Mission Board. Its meetinghouse, built in 1934 and remodeled in 1954, is located at 339 Wadsworth Avenue in Meadville. In 1959 it had 65 members, with Herman F. Myers as pastor. H.S.B.

Mecklenburg, former German province lying between Holstein and Pomerania, was the seat of a short-lived Mennonite settlement of refugees from Russia made in 1921 and sponsored by the Mennonitische Flüchtlings-Fürsorge (q.v.). The location was Lockwisch-Westerbek near Schönberg, about 10 miles northwest of Neuruppin in the far southeast corner of the province. D. Wiebe, who had come out of Siberia in 1918 and settled here in 1920, was the initiator and leader of the settlement. A letter by him to the Mennonite pastor in Hamburg-Altona, published in Mennonitische Blätter for November 1921 (p. 85 f.), reports 37 persons in the settlement (M.F.F. reported 5 families, who were hoping to establish a congregation, to be affiliated with Hamburg-Altona). But the settlement was not a success, and nothing further could be learned about it. (See also Wismar.) H.S.B.

Media Mennonite Chapel (MC) is located on the South 5th Street Road, Oxford, Pa. It is a member of the Ohio and Eastern Mennonite Conference and was organized in 1947. Its membership in 1959 was 82, with Leroy D. Umble and Phares I. Lantz as ministers. M.G.

Menno Mennonite Church (GCM), at Watova (Nowata County, Okla.), now extinct, was organized Aug. 8, 1915. The membership reached c50 in 1920 when it bought and remodeled a farmhouse as a meetinghouse. When it discontinued Jan. 1, 1927, it had c10 members. It never had a resident minister. H.S.B.

Menno Simons Mennonite Church (GCM), now extinct, at Boyertown, Pa., was the Oberholtzer faction in Boyertown of the Hereford-Bally congregation in the Oberholtzer schism of 1847. It used the old meetinghouse in Boyertown alternately with the M.C. group until 1883, when having lost a lawsuit for exclusive use of the meetinghouse it was forced to surrender it, and built the Menno Simons meetinghouse on East 4th Street. Christian Clemmer was the minister 1847-83, followed by Abraham Gottshall in 1886. In 1936 the congregation dissolved, most of the members transferring to the Hereford (GCM) church some 5 miles away. The membership never was large, having 25 in 1911, and 10 in 1930. H.S.B.

Menno Travel Service, Akron, Pa., was established by the Mennonite Central Committee in 1947. Its purpose has been to make travel arrangements for MCC workers, voluntary service personnel, Pax men, foreign missionaries, tour groups, and individuals. Although its primary purpose is to serve its own constituency, it has also served other church groups. It has branch offices in Newton, Kan.; Goshen, Ind.; Amsterdam, Netherlands; Asuncion, Paraguay; London, England; Winnipeg, Man.; and Beirut, Lebanon. Its volume of business in 1958 was approximately $650,000. Arthur Voth was the director of the Service. M.G.

Menno-Friendly Beneficial Association, Philadelphia, Pa., was organized around 1908 and serves primarily the members of the First Mennonite Church in Philadelphia, offering protection to its members in time of disability and death. Up to Jan. 1, 1944, it had paid $28,500 in benefits. M.G.

Menno-Haven, a church camp owned and operated by the Illinois Mennonite (MC) Camp Association, located about 5 miles southeast of Tiskilwa, Ill., was established in 1958; its first operating season was in 1959. H.S.B.

Mennonite Aid, Inc., a subsidiary of Mennonite Mutual Aid, Inc. (q.v.), was established in 1949 as a Pennsylvania nonprofit corporation to provide a channel for sharing the financial burdens of sickness, disability, and burial. H.S.B.

Mennonite Aid, Inc., Goshen, Ind., provides hospital-surgical and burial aid. As of Dec. 31, 1958, the hospital-surgical membership included 29,388 adults and children and the burial aid plan 3,336 adults and children. During that year over $592,000 had been paid for hospital-surgical claims and $3,000 for burial aid claims. For 1958 the hospital-surgical assessment per person was $42.50 and per family was twice this amount, including all children up to the age of 18. Burial aid benefits were $750 per adult and $150 per child. During the last half of 1958, the organization paid 79.7 per cent of its members' total hospital charges and 61.3 per cent of their surgical expenses. Although it serves principally members of the Mennonite Church (MC), all branches of Mennonites in the United States are eligible for membership. M.G.

Mennonite Automobile Aid, Inc., a subsidiary of Mennonite Mutual Aid, Inc. (q.v.), was established in 1954 as a Pennsylvania nonprofit corporation to provide collision and comprehensive insurance on a mutual basis. In April 1959 the vehicle registration was 2,924. The home office is at Goshen, Ind. H.S.B.

Mennonite Benevolent Society, North Clearbrook, B.C., operates a boarding home for invalids. In 1959 it had 35 guests and a waiting list, but in March of that year its board decided to build a new home accommodating 35 guests. It serves various groups of Mennonites in the Frazer Valley. Gerhard I. Peters was the chairman of the Society. M.G.

Mennonite Benevolent Society, Winnipeg, Man., was organized in 1946 for the purpose of owning and operating Bethania Home for the Aged and Infirm (q.v.). It has some 200 members, all from Mennonite groups in Manitoba of Russian Mennonite background, and elects 12 directors who in turn appoint an executive council to operate Bethania. H.S.B.

Mennonite Biblical Seminary, located at Vilardebo 964, Montevideo, Uruguay, was founded in 1956 as a co-operative effort of the Mennonite Church (MC) and the General Conference Mennonite Church for the training of ministers, missionaries, and church workers for the Mennonite churches of South America. It is sponsored and largely financed by the general mission boards of the two Mennonite conferences named above, but the board of directors also includes members appointed by the co-operative Mennonite groups in South America. The Bragado (Argentina) Mennonite Bible School was merged with it in 1958. It is a bilingual school (Spanish and German) on the secondary level. Nelson Litwiller has been the president from the beginning. The enrollment averages 30-40, including some part-time students. H.S.B.

Mennonite Bookstore, Newton, Kan., was opened on Oct. 19, 1946, at 710 Main Street by the General Conference Mennonite Board of Publication to serve as its retail outlet for the western United States, having had its beginning as the book department of the Mennonite Publication Office (q.v., Supplement). In 1953 the bookstore management was integrated with the Mennonite Publication Office, whose manager then became manager also of the Bookstore. In 1957 an assistant manager was appointed to care for the store. The store was moved to 720 Main Street in March 1955. Managers of the store have been J. M. Suderman 1946-49, A. F. Tieszen 1949-53, Abe M. Wiebe 1953-56, Walter D. Unrau 1956- , Carlyle D. Groves (assistant manager) 1957- . M.Sh.

Mennonite Brethren Biblical Seminary, founded in 1955 and located in Fresno, Cal., is the result of the merger of the Bible and Theology Department of Tabor College (q.v.) and the graduate work at Pacific Bible Institute (q.v.). It is owned and operated by the Board of Education of the Mennonite Brethren Church on behalf of the M.B. Church and the K.M.B. Church. Several members of the faculties of each two schools were chosen to form the new faculty. The first president was B. J. Braun and the first dean G. W. Peters. The B.D. and M.R.E. degrees are offered on the graduate level. By the fall of 1956 the school was located on a six-acre campus at the corner of Chestnut and Buller Streets, adjoining the future campus of the Pacific Bible Institute. H.S.B.

Mennonite Camp Ground Association (MC), founded in 1944, owns and operates Laurelville Mennonite Camp, located 10 miles northeast of Scottdale, Pa., the oldest M.C. camp. H.S.B.

Mennonite Central Peace Committee, the forerunner of the MCC Peace Section (q.v.), was organized on Sept. 30, 1939, to represent the peace committees of seven Mennonite bodies in the United States in preparing for threatening war. Officers were P. C. Hiebert (MB) chairman, E. L. Harshbarger (GCM) vice-chairman and treasurer, and H. S. Bender (MC) secretary. A preliminary organization had already been formed on March 10, 1939, with the same officers. The MCPC adopted a "Plan of Action for Mennonites in Case of War," which outlined a course of united action which was later followed. It also commissioned the MCC to assume the administration of the Civilian Public Service program (q.v.), which it did on Dec. 21, 1940. On Jan. 3, 1942, as a result of an overture by the MCPC, the MCC created the Peace Section to take over the MCPC functions, and on Jan. 13, 1942, the Peace Section was set up, and the MCPC dissolved. H.S.B.

J. D. Unruh, In the Name of Christ (Scottdale, 1952).

Mennonite Commission for War Sufferers: see Mennonite Relief Commission for War Sufferers.

Mennonite Evangelizing and Benevolent Board (MC), the name from 1896 to 1906 of what became the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities (q.v.). H.S.B.

Mennonite Executive Aid Committee, of Eastern Pennsylvania, a united committee representing the Mennonite (MC) conferences of Lancaster and Franconia (leader Amos Herr) and the Eastern Pennsylvania Conference (GCM, leader A. B. Shelly) to provide financial and other assistance to needy Mennonite immigrants from Russia, was formed in April 1874. Attempts by the Mennonite Board of Guardians (q.v.), organized in the Midwest for the same purpose in 1873, to merge with this committee failed. A similar committee was organized in Ontario about the same time, led by Jacob Y. Shantz (q.v.). H.S.B.

Mennonite Foundation, a subsidiary of Mennonite Mutual Aid, Inc. (q.v.), was established in 1954 as an Indiana nonprofit corporation to serve as a depository for tax exempt funds, recognized by the United States Treasury Department. It receives bequests, legacies, and other funds on deposit, subject to distribution by the depositors to religious, charitable, and educational causes. H.S.B.

Mennonite General Hospital (MC), Aibonito, Puerto Rico, a 32-bed hospital built and operated by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, had its origin in 1944 as an outgrowth of a CPS unit. The present building was erected in 1958. H.S.B.

Mennonite Gospel Mission, Hannibal, Mo.: see Mennonite Mission Church.

Mennonite Home Chapel, 6201 Carpenter St., Chicago, Ill.: see Chicago Mennonite Gospel Mission.

Mennonite Hospital Society Concordia, Winnipeg, Man., established in 1928 and incorporated in 1930, operates the Concordia Hospital (q.v.) and also carries on the Concordia group hospital insurance plan, which covered over 1500 families in 1954, paying for their hospitalization up to three months per year, including doctor's fee, operating room, and X-rays at actual cost, but not including medicines and drugs. The assessments in 1953 totaled $44,844, while the amount paid out was $69,418. It serves the province of Manitoba. M.G.

Mennonite Immigration Bureau was organized March 3, 1916, at Newton, Kan., to facilitate the anticipated immigration of Mennonites from Russia as soon as the cessation of hostilities in the European War would permit this. Founders of the Bureau were the ministers G. N. Harms, H. P. Krehbiel, P. H. Richert, Abraham Ratzlaff, and P. H. Unruh. G. N. Harms was president and H. P. Krehbiel was secretary. The Bureau carried on extensive correspondence with state and national officials, transportation companies and land companies to prepare the way for Mennonite settlers from Russia. This migration did not materialize in the early years following the war. When it did become possible to bring Mennonites to North America, the Mennonite Settlers Aid Society (q.v.) and the Mennonite Colonization Board (q.v.) undertook the implementation of the functions previously outlined by the Mennonite Immigration Bureau (H. P. Krehbiel Collection, in BeCL). J.F.S.

Mennonite Invalid Home of Manitoba, in Steinbach, Man., owned and operated by the Evangelical Mennonite Church (Kleine Gemeinde), a 38-bed institution, was founded in 1946 by Abram Vogt with the purchase of a private home. A new 40-bed home is to be built in Steinbach to replace the present inadequate building, and a second one at Rosenort near Morris of 20-bed capacity. H.S.B.

Mennonite Medical Messenger is a newsletter published by the Mennonite Medical Association four or five times yearly. Early issues were not dated nor numbered, but publication apparently began in March 1949. The editors have been Carl M. Hostet-ler 1949-50, Lillie S. Kaufman 1950-51, the executive committee of the association 1951-53, Samuel J. Bucher 1953-58, Samuel J. Bucher and Merle Eshleman 1958-. The place of publication has apparently been the address of the editor, i.e., Goshen, Ind.; East Peoria, Ill.; and Harman, W. Va. The page size is 8½ x 11 inches, and the number of pages varies from issue to issue. N.P.S.

Mennonite Memorial Home (GCM), Bluffton, Ohio, is sponsored by eight Ohio congregations. Its building, which has 20 guest rooms, several at times occupied by married couples, was dedicated March 20, 1955. Mr. and Mrs. Delvin Kirchhofer served as directors of the Home until July 1956, when they were succeeded by Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Duerksen. The Mennonite Memorial Home News has been issued quarterly since April 1949. D.L.G.

Mennonite Mission and Boarding School (CGC), Ganado, Ariz., is located 3½ miles south of Greasewood Trading Post and serves the Navaho Indians. In 1958 it had a membership of 20 with Vernon Giesbrecht as its minister. It was first listed in the Yearbook (CGC) for 1954. M.G.

Mennonite Mutual Aid of Ontario, Vineland, Ont., organized in 1944 as the Mennonite Sickness Benefit Society of Ontario, serves Mennonite Brethren and General Conference Mennonites primarily in Ontario but in other provinces also. It is not incorporated. It had approximately 2500 members, including children, in 1955. In that year it paid out approximately $46,000. M.G.

Mennonite Mutual Burial Aid, Halbstadt, Man., begun in June 1940, was serving over 250 families in 1954 in the vicinity of Halbstadt. In 1953 it had paid claims totaling $675, at the rate of $75 per adult and $40 per child. M.G.

Mennonite Mutual Fire Aid Plan, Hagerstown, Md., was established in 1912 and provides fire and lightning insurance for approximately 475 members of the Washington County, Md.-Franklin County, Pa., Conference (MC). The assessed valuation of property covered in 1953 was approximately $6,773,000 and the amount paid out that year was $5,421.66. Assessments averaged 75 cents annually on $1,000 of property covered. M.G.

Mennonite Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Saskatchewan, Ltd., Waldheim, Sask., was established in 1917 and covers fire, lightning, and windstorm. In the 1957-58 fiscal year it paid out approximately $21,500 in losses. M.G.

Mennonite Mutual Hail Insurance Company for Western Canada, Hepburn, Sask., was established in 1916 and is incorporated. In 1958 it had 2,920 members and in the fiscal year 1958-59 had paid total losses of over $144,000 for crops destroyed by storm. M.G.

Mennonite Mutual Supporting Society of Arnaud-St. Elizabeth, St. Elizabeth, Man., was organized in 1934. It has approximately 700 members. Upon the death of a member $200 burial aid is paid to the survivors. M.G.

Mennonite Nurses' Association (MC), founded in 1942, had approximately 525 members in 1958. Its organ, The Christian Nurse, a 16-page 6 x 9 in. monthly, was merged in September 1958 with Mennonite Hospitals and Homes. It holds its annual meeting in connection with the annual meeting of the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities. H.S.B.

Mennonite Printing Union: see Mennonitischer Druckverein.

Mennonite Publication Office was organized by the Board of Publication (q.v.) of the General Conference Mennonite Church in 1939 to provide an office at Newton, Kan., to have charge of all business affairs connected with the publication of General Conference periodicals and Sunday-school materials, a task which had formerly been invested in the manager of the Mennonite Book Concern (q.v.), Berne, Ind. The Publication Office now functions as the publisher for the General Conference. In 1956 it adopted Faith and Life Press as its publishing name. Besides serving as a wholesaler for Conference publications the Publication Office maintains three retail stores: Mennonite Bookstore (q.v.), Rosthern, Sask.; Mennonite Book Concern (q.v.), Berne, Ind.; and Mennonite Bookstore (q.v.), Newton, Kan. As part of its publication and distribution functions it also provides an editorial department, art department, Sunday-school order department, and audio-visual library. Following the merger of the Board of Publication and Board of Education, the manager of the Publication Office also served as the business manager of the Board of Education and Publication. Managers have been: J. M. Suderman 1939-46, Bernhard Bargen 1946-51, Abe M. Wiebe 1951-56, Walter D. Unrau 1956- . M.S.H.

Mennonite Sanitarium (GCM) was located in the foothills near Alta Loma, Cal. It was an institution for tubercular patients, established by the Pacific District Mennonite Conference and dedicated March 1, 1914. It was discontinued later. M.G.

Mennonite Sunday School Mission of the Lancaster Mennonite Conference (MC) was the successor of the organization known as Mission Advocates (q.v.), after Bishop Board objection and after they had decided they had "advocated" long enough and needed action. Their first quarterly meeting was held at the Paradise meetinghouse, Jan. 4, 1896, and most of such meetings were held there alternating with Kinzer, until the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities became its successor in early 1917 (although organized in 1914 and chartered in 1915). John H. Mellinger was chairman of the Sunday School Mission throughout. The rest of the first organization was John R. Buckwalter assistant chairman, Amos A. Ressler secretary, and Ira L. Hershey treasurer. Red Well Mission and the Intercourse Sunday School soon blossomed, the former attaining unexpected proportions. The Vine Street Mission soon started, with Philadelphia Mission coming to fruition in 1899 and Columbia Mission in 1907. These were days when Mary Denlinger and A. Hershey Leaman of Paradise made the Chicago Mission a reality, and J. A. Ressler of the same area (then living at Scottsdale) went to India, Abram Metzler to Martinsburg in Blair County, Pa., and John M. Kreider and others to Palmyra in northeastern Missouri. These were some of the first fruits of the efforts for carrying out the Great Commission in the Lancaster Mennonite Conference and its outreach. I.D.L.

Ira D. Landis, The Missionary Movement Among Lancaster Conference Mennonites (Scottsdale, 1938).

Mennonite Yearbook and Almanac: see Yearbook of the General Conference Mennonite Church.

Mennonite Youth Farm of the Saskatchewan Mennonite (GCM) Youth Organization (q.v.), located three fourths of a mile south of Rosthern, Sask., is owned by the Conference of Mennonites of Canada, but is operated by a board appointed by the Saskatchewan Mennonite Youth Organization. On the farm, bought in 1943, are located the following institutions (with date of founding and capacity): Rosthern Invalid Home (1944, now 54 beds), Children's Home (1947, 8 beds), Crippled Children's Home (1953, 9 beds), Invalid Home for Women mentally retarded (1953, 12 beds), Invalid Home for Men (1955, 11 beds). In 1951 the Herbert Invalid Home was opened at Herbert, Sask. (25 beds) as a branch of the M.Y. Farm, but operated by a board representing the local community churches in Herbert. The various charitable homes are open to all in need regardless of denomination, and inmates actually come from all of Canada, and from several denominations. Since 1954 the Board appointed by the SMYO has been composed of six members. Henry Friesen has been the long-time chairman. H.S.B.

Mennonite Youth Village (MC), Route 1, White Pigeon, Mich., established in 1949, is owned by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities. A summer camp which serves primarily children of non-Mennonite background from city and rural mission churches, it is operated with a welfare and missionary emphasis. Voluntary service units comprise most of the staff each summer. Mervin Yoder has served as manager and camp director since 1952. M.G.

Mennonitische Forschungsstelle (Mennonite Research Center), at Göttingen, Germany, was founded by the annual meeting of the Mennonitischer Geschichtsverein on May 23, 1948. It has been directed and built up by the president of the Geschichtsverein, Ernst Crous, in his residence at Calsowstrasse 4. It contains (1) archives of nearly 200 files and boxes comprising written copies, newspaper clippings, photographs, etc., arranged according to subjects, and of more than 100 letter files concerning recent events, as well as over 60 West Russian Mennonite church records; (2) a library of some 1,000 volumes dealing with Anabaptists and Mennonites, Pietism, and other movements inside and outside the church, and general church history, as well as a good number of microfilms and a projector for reading arranged according to subjects, and of Mennonite refugees of 1945 ff. By means of a growing lending library and a large correspondence (in 1958 the letter-books numbered 2,670 entries) requests of many kinds or for assistance in research on Anabaptist-Mennonite history such as for dissertation, genealogical studies, etc., could be serviced. E.C.

The "Rechenschaftsbericht der Mennonitischen Forschungsstelle" for 1947-52 and continuations (mimeographed and distributed gratis by the Forschungsstelle) give full information about the work.

Mennonitische Immigrantenbote, Der, the name used in 1924-26 by Der Bote (q.v.).

Mennonitisches Altersheim e.V.: see Mennonitische Heime.

Mennonitisches Hilfswerk Christenpflicht: see Christenpflicht.

Mennonitisch-Russische Bibelgesellschaft von Nord-Amerika, office at Hesston, Kan., was a branch of Licht dem Osten (q.v.) and published the paper Auf zum Werk (q.v.). The founder and chairman of the organization, and editor of the paper, was Gustav Enss, a Mennonite (GCM) minister, Moundridge, Kan. Other members of the organization were M. H. Schlichting, P. H. Unruh, P. D. Dirks, and P. Z. Wiebe. Originally it was affiliated with the Russian Bible and Evangelization Society of New York, which had been organized in 1919 by Paul Rader, A. C. Gäbelein, W. Leon Tucker, and others. It is probable that the Mennonite branch under Enss was in existence only during 1921-23 when Auf zum Werk appeared. C.K.

Mennozentrum was the executive body and office of the Bureau der Molotschnaer Mennonitischen Vereinigung (q.v.) in South Russia organized during the Revolution in 1917. At the meeting of the Allgemeiner Mennonitischer Kongress at Ohrloff in August 1917 the following members were elected to the Mennozentrum, or Zentralbureau, with the highest votes: B. H. Unruh (202), Dr. Peter Dück (192), Heinrich Schröder (182), Heinrich Janz (176), Heinrich Epp (177). This executive body played a significant role in negotiating with the temporary governments such as those of Kerensky and Denikin, the German government, and other organizations including the Verband russischer Bürger deutscher Zunge. The first chairman of this executive body was Johann Willms, who was succeeded by B. H. Unruh. At a regional Molotschna meeting of the Kongress at Rückenau, a Studienkommission (q.v.) was appointed to investigate settlement possibilities abroad for the Mennonites of Russia. Those elected were A. A. Friesen, B. H. Unruh, Heinrich Warkentin, and Daniel Enns. The latter declined to serve as did also his alternate Jakob Neufeld. Johann Esau joined the Studienkommission temporarily. Not much is known about the activities of the Mennozentrum after this. C.K.

Protokoll des Allgemeinen Mennonitischen Kongresses (August 1917); "Benjamin H. Unruh," Bote, Sept. 26, 1951, p. 2.

Midland (Mich.) Evangelical Mennonite Church was established on April 6, 1952. In 1957 it had 41 members, with Charles L. Rupp as pastor. Its church consisted of a converted store building remodeled in 1952. A new building was being planned in 1959. A parsonage was built in 1957-58. R.Sho.

Midway Mennonite Church (MC), Pekin, Ill., is located between Pekin and South Pekin. It was established in 1950 and had 28 members in 1958. Howard Wittrig was its pastor. M.G.

Milan Valley (Okla.) Mennonite (MC) Church, now extinct, was located near Jet in the northwestern part of the state. Among the first settlers were Troys and Zimmermans, who were organized as a congregation in 1895 by S. C. Miller. The first minister was Simon Hetrick. Their meetinghouse was built in 1897. By 1913 the membership had reached 55. It is last listed in the 1940 Mennonite Yearbook with 11 members and Simon Hershberger as minister. M.G.

Milverton (Ont.) Nursing Home (MC) was established in 1955 by the Ontario Amish Mennonite Mission Board, capacity 20 beds. H.S.B.

Minneapolis (Minn.) Mennonite Brethren Church is located at 3900 Tenth Avenue South. The church was organized in December 1955 and in 1959 had 28 members. M.G.

Minot (N.D.) Mennonite Brethren Church was organized May 16, 1955, with 38 charter members. Its meetinghouse was built in 1955 at 4th Avenue and 18th Street. In June 1959 the membership was 77, with Abe D. Unruh as pastor. M.A.K.

Missionary Bulletin, organ of the Conservative Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, began with the first quarter of 1952. It was published quarterly until 1956 or 1957, when it became a monthly. Raymond Byler has been editor from the beginning. The place of printing is Scottdale, Pa. Each issue consists of 8 pages approximately 11 x 8 inches in size. There are occasional illustrations. N.P.S.

Missionary Challenge, organ of the District Mission Board of the Iowa-Nebraska Mennonite Conference, is an illustrated quarterly published since the last quarter of 1948. The editors have been Fred Gingerich 1948-56, Willard E. Roth 1957-58, Clarence R. Sutter 1959-. The place of publication is apparently the address of the editor. The page size is 9 x 6 inches, and the issues have varied from eight to thirty-two pages. GCL has a complete file. N.P.S.

Missionary Light, official publication of the Virginia Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, has been published at Scottdale, Pa., since January 1941. At first an 8-page quarterly, it was enlarged to a 16-page bimonthly with the March 1948 issue. The editors have been Byard W. Shank, Linden M. Wenger 1951-53, Laban Peachey 1953-. The page size of the first 18 volumes was 10½ x 7¾ inches. With the first issue of 1959 it was reduced to 9 x 6 inches. It is illustrated. N.P.S.

Missioners: see Hutterite Missioners.

Moller (Müller), Lorenz, of Görmar, a village near Mühlhausen in Thuringia, an active Anabaptist, associate of Ludwig Spon (q.v.) of Ershausen, Hans Rinkleben of Oberdorla, and Klaus Scharf of Mühlhausen, was arrested in May 1533 with six others, then freed, arrested again in January 1535 at Mühlhausen, and again released in mid-1535. He seems to have been unstable, and probably at least twice left and rejoined the Anabaptist group in northern Thuringia. Nothing is known of his further career. (Wappler, Thüringen.) H.S.B.

Molotschna Mutual Fire Insurance: see Molotschna Fire Insurance.

Montezuma (Ga.) Beachy Amish Mennonite Church was organized in 1953. During that year a used church in Montezuma was purchased. In 1959 the membership was 112, with Jonas H. Hershberger serving as bishop. M.G.

Moorepark (Mich.) Mennonite Church (MC) was established as an outpost of the Middlebury, Ind., congregation (MC) in 1947. In 1955 the congregation became independent. The meetinghouse was purchased from a former Reformed congregation. At first the preaching was done by Wilbur Yoder, pastor of the sponsoring congregation, but in 1948 Etril Leinbach was ordained preacher; eight years later he became bishop. In 1958 the membership was 63, with Leinbach serving as pastor. J.C.W.

Mornington Amish Mennonite Church, a member of the Beachy Amish group, was formed in 1904 by a conservative schism from the Poole (Mornington) A.M. congregation (see Mapleview) led by Bishop Nicholas Nafziger, hence locally is often called the Nafziger church. Its meetinghouse was built in 1904 about a mile and a half west of the Poole A.M. meetinghouse in Mornington Township, Perth Co., Ont. In 1958 the membership was 175, with Moses Nafziger as bishop and Samuel Nafziger and Joseph Steckley as ministers. H.S.B.

Morris Run Mennonite Church (MC) is located near Blossburg, Tioga Co., Pa. The start of the work here was occasioned by a Mennonite hunting camp in Fall Brook. Mennonites often attended the Primitive Baptist Church in this rural town when in the community over Sunday, frequently bringing Mennonite preachers with them. At Wheelerville, near by, Grant Noll and others conducted a prosperous summer Bible school for a decade. Upon invitation the Itinerant Evangelism Committee of the Lancaster Conference started a work in the Primitive Baptist Meetinghouse in Fall Brook in 1954. Melvin L. Kauffman was licensed for the work, finally moving into the area and on Jan. 19, 1958, was ordained as pastor. The present membership is 15. I.D.L.

Mount Bethel Mennonite Church (GCM), now extinct (see Mt. Bethel, MC), located in Bangor, Pa., was from 1847 to 1858 a part of the Oberholtzer Conference. Before 1847 it was a part of the Franconia Conference (MC) and after 1858 a part of the Evangelical Mennonites (q.v.), led by Wm. Gehman. A brick meetinghouse was built in 1822, which was taken over by the Lutherans in 1865. (See Rothrock.) H.S.B.

Mount Hermon Amish Mennonite Church is an independent congregation in Shelby County, near Shelbyville, Ill. The Amish first moved to the county in 1907 from Elkhart County, Ind., in order to be under the direction of John D. Kauffman (q.v.), who preached while in an unconscious state. Kauffman was ordained to the office of bishop in 1911. Joseph Reber, who was ordained minister of the congregation in 1912 and chosen to succeed Bishop Kauffman in 1914, was still serving in 1958. The membership of Mt. Hermon in 1957 was 41, with D. M. Ulrich and Christy Christner as ministers. M.G.

Mount Joy Mennonite Church (MC) is located approximately 8 miles southeast of Calico Rock, Ark., three fourths of a mile off State Road 5. The congregation was organized in 1949 and the church built in 1953. There were 7 members in 1959, with Manasseh E. Bontreger as pastor. M.G.

Mount Zion Beachy Amish Mennonite Church is located near Staunton, Va., on State Road 652 between 608 and 651. The congregation was organized in 1954 and the church built in 1955. It had 101 members in 1959, with Adam G. Byler as bishop. M.G.

Mountain Lake Hospital, Mountain Lake, Minn., owned and operated by the Bethel Hospital Association (q.v.), was established in September 1905 as the Mennonite (GCM) Hospital. In 1911 the hospital was affiliated with Bethel Deaconess Hospital of Newton, Kan., and was then incorporated under the new name of Bethel Deaconess Hospital. On June 5, 1921, a new 21-bed hospital was dedicated. Several years later the relationship with the Newton hospital was dissolved and the Mountain Lake hospital was given its present name.

The Bethel Hospital Association now operates also the 55-bed Eventide Home, a home for the aged, which was built in 1950 across the street from the hospital. Both institutions are supported by the eight Mennonite churches of four different branches in the Mountain Lake community. W.E.J.

Mountain View Mennonite Church (MC), a member of the South Central Conference, was organized in 1947. The meetinghouse, built in 1948, is located in the Buffalo community of Baxter County, Ark. In 1959 the membership was 30, with Fred Meyer as licensed minister. H.S.B.

Mountain View Nursing Home, Glenwood Springs, Col., sponsored by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities (MC), was established in 1956 on a leased basis, capacity 31 beds. H.S.B.

Mutual Aid Service, Inc. (GCM), was organized in 1958 to replace the former committee on Mutual Aid, a subcommittee of the Board of Christian Service, and is designed to carry on the program of mutual aid and brotherhood sharing services sponsored by this board. This program includes the Hospital-Surgical Aid Plan, Investment Services, Placement Assistance, and Mutual Aid Assistance Loans. Head offices are in the Conference Headquarters at 722 Main, Newton, Kan. H.S.B.

Nachbarschaftsheim (Neighborhood Center), a term used by the MCC for its service projects in Germany (e.g., Heilbronn and Berlin) and Austria after World War II, in which a barracks or a purchased or rented house was used as a center for such activities as sewing room, youth meetings, boys' clubs, library and reading room, and some clothing and food distribution. Sometimes Sunday school and other religious services were conducted in them also. H.S.B.

Nampa (Idaho) Mennonite Church (MC). On Dec. 4, 1899, the congregation now bearing the name Nampa Mennonite Church was organized by George R. Brunk, Sr. The meetinghouse built at about that time, located two miles west of Nampa, was known as the Antioch church. In 1906 the Nampa Home Mission was built and dedicated in the city of Nampa. In 1937 a new building was erected at its present location, 9th Avenue and 6th Street N. The congregation now sponsors a branch Sunday school, a Christian day school (est. 1944), summer Bible schools, and various young people's activities. In 1958 the membership was 150, with E. S. Garber as bishop-pastor, and D. A. Good, Harold Hochstetler, and O. D. Yoder as ministers. R.E.G.

National Heights Mennonite Church (MC), Richmond, Va., organized in 1951, located in the eastern part of the state capital, is the outgrowth of a survey made by Eastern Mennonite College students. A Bible school and a series of meetings were held in a tent in 1948 and 1949 respectively. After this services were held in private homes, and in a rented building. The Virginia Board of Missions and Charities built a brick church in 1955. In 1958 the membership was 36, with Ralph Ziegler as pastor. H.A.B.

Nebo Mennonite Church (GCM) at Meade, Kan., was organized c1913 with B. A. Wiens as pastor. It existed until 1923. H.S.B.

Nebraska Aid Committee was organized in the Mennonite Church (GCM) of Beatrice, Neb., in 1884, to bring at least 20 Mennonite families from Khiva (q.v.), Russia, to the United States. The appeal printed in the Herald of Truth, April 15, 1884, suggested that $400 per family would be required to bring them to Kansas or Nebraska. The committee consisted of L. E. Zimmerman, John Penner, J. G. Wiebe, Peter Janzen, and John von Steen. A later announcement by Zimmerman, who was a deacon of the Beatrice church and treasurer of the committee, reported that $3,000 had been received and that additional gifts by Herald readers could be sent to John F. Funk, who had agreed to forward gifts to the committee. News items in 1884 indicated that some of these families arrived in America that year. The same appeals were made in the Bundesbote, and several reports of the migration appeared there, e.g., June 15, 1884, and Sept. 12, 1884. M.G.

Needlework. No special Mennonite needlework can be reported except the making of quilts, commonly made in group sewings, often as social occasions and also at women's sewing circles, e.g., in the Mennonite Church (MC) and among the Old Order Amish. The intricate designs often used are borrowed or bought commercially; hence there is little original or creative art expression.

Older generations of Mennonite and Amish women of Pennsylvania Dutch background produced a great deal of needlecraft for household use and as gifts. In this category would come embroidered bedspreads, towels, dresser scarves, and pillowcases, hooked and braided rugs, fancy cushion tops, etc. Many of these items had genuine folk art character, often with typical Pennsylvania Dutch motifs, some of which have found their way into art museums and museums of folk art. H.S.B.

Neffsville Mennonite Church (MC), a member of the Ohio and Eastern Conference, was organized in 1952 largely by members who had withdrawn from the East Chestnut Street Church of the Lancaster Conference. Its meetinghouse, located at the south edge, of Neffsville, Pa., 3½ miles north of Lancaster, was erected in 1957. In 1958 it had 229 members, with Maurice W. Landis as pastor. H.S.B.

Nehrung (Binnen-Nehrung), located east of the Vistula River near the Baltic Coast, was occupied by Dutch Mennonites coming from the Danzig Werder. They established Holländerdörfer (q.v.) there during the first decades of the 17th century in accordance with a special agreement with the authorities. Among the villages established were Schönbaum, Nickelswalde, Pasewark, and Prinzlaff. They drained swamps and built dams in a territory which had not previously been under cultivation. C.K.

Horst Penner, Ansiedlung mennonitischer Niederländer im Weichselmündungsgebiet von der Mitte des 16. Jahrhunderts bis zum Beginn der preussischen Zeit (Weierhof, Germany, 1940) 23-33.

Ness City, Kan., Mennonite (MC) settlement, now extinct, consisted of 10 members, as reported by H. P. Krehbiel in 1911. J. Mishler served as the minister in this community, located 8 miles southwest of Ness City. M.G.

Neufeld, Dietrich (1886-1958), a Russian Mennonite writer, adopted the name Dederich Navall when he became a U.S. citizen. He was born at Orloff, Zagradovka, Russia, on Sept. 2, 1886, the son of Dietrich Neufeld and Anna Berg-Neufeld. In 1907 he completed his secondary training by obtaining a teacher's certificate, after which he taught in Russia until 1919. After this he taught in various schools in Germany and studied at the universities of Basel, Heidelberg, Leipzig, and Jena where he received his Ph.D. in 1922. Meanwhile, he spent some time during the Revolution, 1919-20, in Russia, at the Choritzza and Zagradovka settlements. He married Lotte Ross of Emden, Germany, Dec. 21, 1921. His experiences during the Russian Revolution are related in the books Mennonitentum in der Ukraine (Emden, 1922), Ein Tagebuch aus dem Reiche des Totentanzes (Emden, 1921), and Zu Pferd 1000 Km durch die Ukraina (Emden, 1922). Navall was a good writer who greatly appreciated the Russian culture and was influenced by Tolstoi.

In 1923 he came to America and taught at Bluffton College 1923-26, then at Antioch College, University of New Mexico, Pomona College, and George Pepperdine College. In America he wrote the drama Kanadische Mennoniten (Winnipeg, 1924), published under the pseudonym Novocampus, and Russian Dance of Death (Claremont, Cal., 1930) under the pseudonym Dirk Gora. The latter is a translation of the German Totentanz. C.K.

New Friedensberg Mennonite Church (GCM) is located 2½ miles west of Vona, Col. The congregation was organized in 1907 and the church built in 1912. It had 20 members in 1959. In 1957 its pastor was J. W. Bergen. M.G.

New Home Mennonite Church (GCM), now extinct, was located 2 miles south of Westbrook, Cottonwood Co., Minn., c30 miles from the Immanuel church at Delft. It was organized in 1881 by immigrants from Galicia. The last record of the group is in 1950 when it had 20 members, the highest membership having been reached in 1945 with 46 members. The first minister was Daniel Huber, the last E. E. Hubin. H.S.B.

Niagara Mutual Funeral Society, Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ont., was an outgrowth of the Vineland Burial Society, forming a separate organization in 1942. As of March 1956 it had 2,146 members from various Mennonite branches in all areas of Canada. It covered total funeral expenses and in 1953 paid out $1,329.75. M.G.

Nigeria (Africa) Mennonite Church (MC) was established in March 1959, when nine congregations of independent Christians in Calabar Province in eastern Nigeria were received into the Mennonite Church by Bishop S. J. Hostetler of the Ghana Mennonite Mission (q.v.), upon adoption by each church of a confession of faith of twenty articles. Seventy additional congregations have asked for affiliation. Calabar is one of the most thickly populated areas of West Africa and is full of churches and schools of various denominations. H.S.B.

S. J. Hostetler, "Nigeria Churches Join Mennonites," Gospel Herald, May 5, 1959, pp. 422 f.

Nikolai, Gerhardus: see Nicolai, Gerhard.

Nonconformists, a term originally meaning those Christians who did not conform to the Act of Uniformity in England issued by Queen Elizabeth in requiring all to conform to the form of worship of the Church of England. It has come to refer to all Protestant bodies in England except the Church of England, not only the Congregationalists and Baptists, who were the first nonconformists. H.S.B.

North Battleford (Sask.) Mennonite Church (GCM) had its beginning as a mission in 1951, and was organized as a congregation on Jan. 18, 1959, with 28 charter members and Irvin V. Schmidt as elder-pastor. Its meetinghouse is a remodeled former air force mess hall bought in 1953 and moved to its present location at 1291 109th Street in the summer of 1956. G.G.E.

North Central Conference Mission Board (MC) was established in 1921 to operate rural missions in the conference area of North and South Dakota, Montana, and Minnesota. H.S.B.

North Clearbrook (B.C.) Mennonite Brethren Church, formerly called North Abbotsford M.B. Church (q.v.), in 1957 had 421 members, with A. H. Konrad as leader-pastor, and A. J. Friesen as assistant leader-pastor. H.S.B.

North Side Mennonite Church (MC), located at 716 North Locust St., Hagerstown, Md., was established as a mission in 1931. It became an organized congregation in 1956, under the Ohio and Eastern Conference. Its building was purchased in 1949 and remodeled to serve as a church. In 1959 the membership was 34, with Harold A. Lehman as pastor. M.G.

Northern Light Gospel Mission (MC) was begun as an independent mission in 1938 by Irwin Schantz and Llewellyn Groff of the Lancaster Mennonite Conference. They established missions in northern Minnesota beginning in 1939. Funds are collected for the mission by a bimonthly newsletter, mostly from Eastern Pennsylvania and the Conservative Mennonite Church. In 1951 the mission churches established in the area either were organized as congregations of the North Central Mennonite District Conference, or were placed under the jurisdiction of an organized congregation, under the North Central Mennonite Mission Board, or, as in the case of Kitchi Pines and Cloverdale, under the sponsorship of Conservative Mennonite churches in Iowa. With the nine stations no longer under his responsibility, Schantz turned his attention to northern Ontario and established a home base at Red Lake, Ont., the northernmost point of the highway. Mission activity is now carried on in the Indian reservations in the Lake of the Woods area. In 1957 the staff of workers numbered about fifteen. M.G.

Ohm-Stübchen ("anteroom"), a traditional room next to the entrance to a Mennonite meetinghouse in Prussia, Poland, and Russia, was transplanted to North America. The elder, referred to as Ohm (q.v.), and the ministers gathered there to make arrangements for the worship service and to wait for the time to start. This was also the room for business meetings and for interviewing members of the congregation. At the beginning of the worship service the elder led the ministers to the pulpit. Entering the sanctuary, he would at times announce "Peace be with you," as was the practice until after World War I in the Beatrice (Neb.) Mennonite Church (GCM). The modern church structure has eliminated this room by possibly making provision for a minister's study. An almost identical room was used (and is in many places still used) in the same way in the meetinghouses of the Mennonite Church (MC) called in Pennsylvania-German "das Kämmerli." In fact, most Mennonite groups in America formerly had this custom. C.K.

Old Mennonites is not the official name of any Mennonite body, but in North America it is often popularly used to refer to the Mennonite Church (q.v.) in contrast to various bodies of "New" Mennonites (q.v.) which split off from it. H.S.B.

Olevian (erroneously Olivian ME II, 823), Caspar (1536-87), Reformed theologian in Germany active as Calvinist leader, at Heidelberg 1560-76, at Berlenburg 1576-84, and at Herborn 1584-87. He was co-author of the Heidelberg Catechism (1563), and active in the introduction of Reformed doctrine, polity, and discipline in the Palatinate and Wittgenstein. H.S.B.

Olive Branch confession: see Olijftackken.

Olivi, Petrus (1248-98), a leader of the Franciscan Spirituals, an offshoot of the great Franciscan order with strong spiritual and apocalyptic tendencies, which finally led to a break with the papacy and subsequent persecution by the Catholic Church. In 1295-96 Olivi wrote his Postil on the Apocalypse (an exposition of the Book of Revelation), which began to circulate after his death and soon became a widely used devotional book. In general it follows the eschatological ideas of Joachim de Floris. The papacy is to Olivi the "antichrist," the woman on the beast, etc. Under Pope John XXII, who resided in Avignon, the grave of Olivi was defaced and his bones burned (1318).

Strangely enough, these facts are mentioned in the early part of the Hutterite Chronicle, apparently because the Hutterites were familiar with this strange Postil. Its story is, however, shrouded in darkness. No German translation of the book has become known, but it is assumed that the book had a wide circulation, both in Latin and in German, among medieval sectarians such as the Spirituals and the Waldenses. Since both were severely persecuted, they kept their books secret. Perhaps by way of the Waldenses in Upper Austria (Steyr?) the book reached the Moravian Anabaptists by c1530. Caspar Braitmichel (q.v.) mentions it expressly in his introduction to the Chronicle. Even though the Brethren were not strongly interested in the Book of Revelation, they were apparently attracted by the Postil. The Postil has been preserved in at least one old Hutterite codex of 1593 (now in Esztergom, Hungary), called Auslegung der Offenbarung Johannes in 22 Kapiteln. When the Brethren came to America they brought a copy with them (now unknown), from which Elias Walter (q.v.) made several copies (c1900).

The story of this book has some significance in view of the question of continuity of the "old evangelical brotherhoods" (q.v.). Here, apparently, a book exists which was handed down from Franciscans to Waldenses and thence to the Anabaptists, thus proving contacts of more than superficial nature; it does not, however, prove full continuity and dependence. R.F.

R. Friedmann, "A Hutterite Book of Medieval Origin," MQR XXX (1956) 65-71; E. Benz, Ecclesia Spiritualis (Stuttgart, 1934); Zieglschmid, Chronik, 39.

Olyftack Confession: see Olijftackken.

Ostrog, Volhynia (q.v.), Russia, a town near which Prussian Mennonite settlers from the Graudenz area settled in 1801-12; they had first settled in 1791 at Michalin, southwest of Kiev. The first village settled was Karolswalde (q.v.), four miles south of Ostrog. Ultimately the settlement was composed of 9 villages, most of them south of Ostrog. Virtually the entire group emigrated in 1874 to Canton and Pawnee Rock, Kan., and Avon, S.D. H.S.B.

Ozarks Mission (KMB), located at Compton, Ark., established under the Home Missions Committee, was begun in 1949, when Elizabeth Hofer and Anna Klassen came to Kingston, Ark. In 1959 the work was in charge of the William Ratzlaffs at Ponca and Compton, the J. D. Wiencks at Kingston and Elkhorn, and Elizabeth Hofer at Kingston. It consists of Bible teaching in the school at Kingston, Sunday schools, prayer meetings, young people's work, and preaching services. Some 50 have been baptized, but no K.M.B. congregations are organized; the local members organize themselves. H.S.B.

Pacific Mennonite Aid Society, Reedley, Cal., was established in 1941. It serves Mennonites in the United States and Canada and has also on its membership roll many missionaries in foreign countries. It is not incorporated. It has paid 58 death claims since its inception, and has accumulated a surplus of over $51,000.00. It passed the 1,000 mark in membership in 1958. A.A.S.

Pacifism (IV, 105b). Add to Bibliography: Fred Daniels, "Theories of Conscientious Objectors Toward War in the 16th and 17th Centuries" (unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, Univ. of Minnesota, 1954); Ernst Correll, article Friedensbewegung (ML I, 706-13); Wm. D. S. Witte, "Quaker Pacifism in the United States 1919-42" (unpublished Ph.D. dissertation at Columbia University, 1954); Sibley Mulford, "Political Theories of Modern Religious Pacifism," American Political Science Review, June 1943.

Palm Lake Mennonite Church (GCM), now extinct, located near Lake Charles, La., was started c1917 by families largely from Gnadenberg church near Whitewater, Kan. Beginning with 12 members, it reached about 30 in 1923, but about 1925 it disbanded. It never had a resident minister nor a meetinghouse of its own. H.S.B.

Palo Hincado Mennonite Church, Palo Hincado, Barranquitas, Puerto Rico, was begun in 1948, but the first members were received in 1950. The meetinghouse was built in 1956. In 1958 the membership was 36, with Don Heiser as pastor. H.S.B.

Gladys Widmer, We Enter Puerto Rico (Elkhart, 1953).

Pawnee Rock (Kan.) Mennonite Church: see Bergthal Mennonite Church, Pawnee Rock.

Peace and Arbitration Committee, appointed at the Annual Conference of the Mennonite Church of Canada (MC) in 1906 to represent the conference in "advancing the cause of nonresistance in every legitimate way," reported to conference and was reappointed annually until 1922, when a motion was passed to release it. Those appointed to this committee in 1906 were S. F. Coffman (q.v.), L. J. Burkholder (q.v.), and David Bergey (q.v.). In 1911 the committee was increased to four members. The action calling the committee into existence in 1906 included a recommendation that a Peace and Arbitration Association be organized in each member congregation of the conference. At least one congregation responded, for the Mennonite Historical Library at Goshen College has an undated printed constitution of the Mennonite Peace and Arbitration Association located at the Wideman Church (q.v.), York County, Ont. The stated object of this organization was "the promotion of universal and permanent peace, by means of arbitration and by cultivating the spirit of peace and good will among men." It is not known how extensive its membership and activities were, nor how long it lasted. N.P.S.

Peasants' War, a social revolution in Germany which, though preceded by a 100-year history of tension and occasional outbreaks, broke out in full bloody revolutionary form in June 1524, and was relatively suppressed by May 1525. Beginning at Stühlingen near Schaffhausen it spread northward and westward via the Black Forest and Alsace, as far as Westphalia, Hesse, and Thuringia, and eastward via the Allgäu and Tirol as far as Hungary. After early success, including considerable destruction of castles and monasteries, it was suppressed in pitched battles (Alsace, May 17, 1525; Württemberg, May 12; Franconia, June 2 and 4; Thuringia-Saxony at Frankenhausen, May 15; around Salzburg as late as 1526). The confusion about the origin and character of the revolution, as well as its relation to Anabaptism and to men like Thomas Müntzer (q.v.), has gradually been cleared. Müntzer joined the movement and was captured in the battle of Frankenhausen, but he was not the originator or even a major leader. Hubmaier (q.v.) has been blamed as the originator, and as the author of the Twelve Articles (Oct., 1524) of the peasants, but both charges have been disproved by sound scholarship. The Anabaptists were nowhere implicated; in fact the origin of Anabaptism in 1525 at Zürich came months after the war began. Some of the disillusioned participants (Melchior Rinck, q.v.) and fellow travelers (Hans Hut, q.v.) later joined the Anabaptists (1526-27), but this proves only that Anabaptist preachers found a hearing in the aftermath. Competent Lutheran historians have asserted that the outcome of the Peasants' War, with total failure of the peasants to win any of their otherwise very reasonable and moderate original demands (12 Articles), and the vicious attacks on the revolutionaries by Luther in which he strongly took the side of the nobles, led to the turning away of the mass of the peasantry from the Reformation. In this disillusioned mass it would be probable that some turned to Anabaptism, which was already critical of Luther and the state church system, and whose offer of the free church with local lay leadership would certainly find sympathy among the peasants, one of whose twelve articles had called for the local election of the pastor by the people and the administration of the tithe and church finances locally by those who paid them. Franz (p. 479) says flatly, "Many peasants went over (flüchteten) to the Anabaptists. The suppression of the remnants of the Peasants' War and the Anabaptists henceforth went hand in hand." That the Anabaptist concept of Christianity as earnest discipleship under the lordship of Christ, of the church as a free believers' church, and of the ethic of love and sharing had revolutionary implications for traditional European society and Christianity is clear. But nothing is clearer than that the Anabaptist ethic of love and nonresistance made it impossible for Anabaptism to be revolutionary in the sense of the Peasants' War. This does not deny the fact of fringe personalities or fellow travelers here and there who stepped over into radical or revolutionary attitudes, or even into such action as that of the Münsterite kingdom.

H.S.B.

Günther Franz, Der deutsche Bauernkrieg (Munich and Berlin, 1933); H. Böhmer, Urkunden zur Geschichte des Bauernkriegs und der Wiedertäufer (Bonn, 1910, and Berlin, 1933); A. J. Ramaker, "Hubmaier's Participation in the Peasants' Uprising and in the Authorship of the Peasants' Articles of 1525," Rochester Baptist Theological Seminary Bulletin; W. Wiswedel, Dr. Balthasar Hubmaier (Gunzenhausen, 1940); ML I, 137-39.

Penner, Gerhard (1805-78), elder of the Heubuden Mennonite Church, West Prussia, was the leader of the conservative Mennonites who opposed the acceptance of the constitution adopted by the North German Confederation on Oct. 18, 1867, which stipulated that the Mennonites accept noncombatant services. Twenty-three representatives of the West Prussian congregations met in his house at Warnau (Koczelitzky) and a delegation of five was sent to Berlin to interview Roon, the Minister of War. Nevertheless the law pertaining to military service was published, and the delegation was summoned to Berlin once more. When Gerhard Penner, Johann Andreas (q.v.), and others saw that they would be compelled to accept noncombatant service, Penner migrated to Beatrice, Neb., in 1877, with a minority of the large Heubuden congregation. He died there in February 1878. He had served the Heubuden congregation as elder since 1852. In 1877 he resigned because the majority of the members were willing to accept noncombatant service. Gerhard Penner of Irrgang, minister of the Heubuden Church 1861-67, was his nephew. In 1888 Gerhard Penner Jr., son of Elder Gerhard Penner, was ordained as minister and elder of the First Mennonite Church of Beatrice (q.v.) and served until 1920 when he was succeeded by Franz Albrecht. Cornelius Penner, the son of Gerhard Penner, also served the congregation as minister.

C.K.

W. C. Andreas, "High Lights and Side Lights of the Mennonites in Beatrice," Menn. Life I (July 1946) 21 ff.

Perfectionism, the doctrine which teaches both the possibility and actuality of complete freedom from sin in this life for the Christian. Among American Protestants it is more often referred to as entire sanctification of the believer or total eradication of the sinful nature.

John Wesley is held to have advocated perfectionism, though he never claimed it for himself. In any case numbers of his followers, especially in the so-called "holiness" denominations in America, have continued to advocate and claim entire sanctification. Certain other small groups both in Europe and America have arisen at various times to advocate or claim sinlessness. In Emmmenthal in the Swiss canton of Bern, Fritz Bergen, a converted drunkard, has led a small movement of perfectionists called "Evangelischer Brüderverein" (Bergerleute).

Extreme advocates of perfectionism usually have either defective ethical standards or an impossible psychology of moral action, or substitute an inner perfection of will and love toward God for outer perfection of character. John Wesley said, "The highest perfection which man can attain . . . does not exclude ignorance, error, and a thousand infirmities."

The Reformers and all the major Protestant denominations reject perfectionism. In so doing they frequently incline toward excusing sin and tend to encourage laxity, emphasizing forgiveness rather than holiness. Dietrich Bonhoeffer has caustically referred to this attitude as "justification in sin" rather than "from sin" and called it the offer of "cheap grace." His sweeping indictment of much of Protestantism is amply justified. Often those Christians and groups of Christians who have honestly and earnestly sought to live a life of high dedication, obedience, and holiness have been not only misunderstood but also frivolously condemned as hypocrites or self-righteous. The attempt to strive toward perfection ("Be ye therefore perfect, even as your heavenly Father is perfect") has often been erroneously labeled perfectionism. The Anabaptists and Mennonites have suffered under this charge from the beginning. It is true that they endeavored to maintain a church "without spot or wrinkle," which is represented in Eph. 5:27 as the goal which Christ has for the church; but this is far from the claim to have reached perfection, as the noting of the insistence upon church discipline by the group quickly shows. However, there is patently on this point a major difference in emphasis between state-church Protestantism with its toleration of almost all degrees of sin in the church, both of omission and commission, and Anabaptism with its insistence on a high level of personal and group performance in character, life, and service.

H.S.B.

R. Newton Flew, The Idea of Perfection in Christian Theology. An Historical Study of the Christian Ideal for the Present Life (London, 1934).

Peters, A. B. (1860-1959), an influential Bible teacher and preacher (MB), was born March 26, 1860, in Gnadenheim, South Russia, the son of Bernhard and Agathe Peters. He was a teacher by profession, teaching 11 years at Tiegerweide and 25 years at Tashenak. He was married in 1887 to Katharina Willms (d. 1923); they had 14 children. In 1924 he left Russia with 6 children, settling finally in Winnipeg in 1927. Here he served many years as Bible School teacher, preacher, and pastoral helper. He died May 17, 1959.

H.S.B.

Phylloxera Unit, a Mennonite alternative service unit in South Russia, was created in connection with the Forestry Service (q.v.). This mobile unit was charged with the responsibility of exterminating plant lice in the vineyards of the Southern Crimea. Since it was a mobile unit operating only during part of the year, its organizational and educational aspects differed from those of the regular forestry camps. (Friesen, Brüderschaft, 513, 515, 520, 521.)

C.K.

Pilgrim Mennonite Press was organized late in 1958 to be a publishing agency for a group of conservative-minded individuals who had held several interest-meetings at the Pilgrim Mennonite Church (MC), Amelia, Va. On Jan. 18, 1959, before any actual publication was undertaken, it merged with the Herald of Truth (q.v.) to form a board of twelve members known as Herald of Truth Publications, Inc., with its principal place of business at Hartville, Ohio. Paul M. Landis of Norfolk, Va., is chairman, as he was of the Pilgrim Press.

H.S.B.

Pinneberg, a town (pop. 22,000) 11 miles northwest of the center of Hamburg, Germany, is the seat of a Mennonite home for the aged, opened in 1956 in a house rented for that purpose, and named "Abendfrieden." It is operated by Mennonitische Heime (q.v.) and serves mostly aged Mennonite refugees from West Prussia.

H.S.B.

Pleasant Hill Mennonite Church (GCM), located at 1305 E. 12th St., Saskatoon, Sask., was begun in 1928 as a mission, and organized as a congregation April 20, 1958, with 20 charter members. In January 1953 a rebuilt recreation hall was dedicated as the meetinghouse. In 1959 the membership was 28, with B. H. Fast as pastor.

H.S.B.

Pleasant View Mennonite Church (MC), Larned, Kan., now extinct, was founded by the Kings, Zooks, and others when they met for worship in the Eureka schoolhouse in 1885 and thus was known as the Eureka Mennonite Church. It built a meetinghouse in 1895. Its first minister was David S. King, ordained for this congregation. In the 1908 Yearbook it is listed with 15 members but it does not appear again until the 1916 Yearbook, when it is called the Pleasant View Mennonite Church (membership not given). Others who served the church include Peter Zimmerman, J. B. Brunk, Edward Diener, and Harry Diener. It was last listed in the 1942 Yearbook, with 17 members but without a pastor.

M.G.

Plough and Pflug: see Society of Brothers.

Polish Church: see Polish Brethren.

Pottery: see Ceramics.

Prairie Mennonite Mutual Fire Insurance Company, Herbert, Sask., was incorporated in 1941, but was in existence earlier. In 1953 it had approximately 600 patrons in southern Saskatchewan. The company covers losses by fire, windstorm, and lightning. In 1953 it paid out about $10,000 on $3 million of insured property.

M.G.

Priesthood of All Believers, a major point in Protestant doctrine, was also strongly held by the Anabaptists and is a vital idea in Mennonitism. It means not only that no priest is necessary as a mediator between the human individual and God, so that every man has free access to God by repentance and faith in Christ, but also that all believers have a priestly office to perform for each other in that in Christ each can be a channel of God's grace to his fellow and indeed has a responsibility to be such. H.S.B.

Privilegium: see Privileges.

Prokhanov, Ivan Stepanovitch (1869-1935), founder of the organized church of the Evangelical Christians in Russia, was born in a well-to-do Molokan family in Vladikavkas, North Caucasus, Russia, which later joined the Baptists. He was converted in 1887 and joined the Baptist Church. He graduated in 1893 from the Technological Institute in St. Petersburg as an engineer. Here he joined the leaderless small group of the Evangelical Christians founded in 1876, which Pashkov and Korff had led until their exile in 1884. Driven by a strong sense of call to preach the Gospel to the masses, he soon gave up his career as an engineer. For three years, 1895-98, he studied theology in England (Baptist at Bristol, Congregational at New College in London), in Berlin, Germany, and in Paris. Returning to Russia, he finally settled in St. Petersburg where he found employment in the St. Petersburg branch of the American Westinghouse Brake Company. He now entered upon a remarkable career as preacher, writer, and leader. He reorganized the Evangelical Christians in 1908, of which he served as president until 1928, when he left Russia never to return. He sought, without full success, to unite the Baptists and the Evangelical Christians (the union finally occurred in 1944). In 1913 he began a Bible training program for Christian workers, which he continued until 1928 with the help of Johann Kargel (q.v.) and others.

Prokhanov had close connections for a time with the Mennonites of Russia, particularly in connection with the growth of nonresistant convictions in Russia. In 1919 the new Soviet government granted by decree the privilege of alternate service to Mennonites, Baptists, Evangelical Christians, Molokans, Dukhobors, Tolstoyans, and others. Later Prokhanov issued a declaration under severe pressure which stated that the Evangelical Christians should do military service. The Baptists finally did the same in 1923. Prokhanov was for a time president of the Raduga (q.v.) Publishing House at Halbstadt, co-operating in this project with the Mennonites.

Prokhanov took part in the Baptist World Congress at Stockholm in 1923 when he was chosen a vice-president, and in 1928 at Toronto. Because of dangers in Russia he did not return, but served the emigre Russian evangelical groups in Europe and America. He died in Berlin, Germany, Oct. 6, 1935, and was buried there. H.S.B.

W. Gutsche, Westliche Quellen des Russischen Stundismus (Kassel, 1956).

Puerto Rico Mennonite Conference (MC) was organized in 1949 and admitted to membership in the Mennonite General Conference at its 1955 session. In 1958 it had 11 congregations and 3 mission stations, with a total membership of 366. (See Puerto Rico.) H.S.B.

Quebec. The Ontario Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities (MC) began mission work in Quebec in 1957. Two missionary couples have been at work, one located in Montreal-Nord, and one in the town of Joliette. H.S.B.

Quiring, Jacob (1876-1942), a Mennonite evangelist and teacher, son of Elder Johann Quiring (q.v.) at Köppental, Trakt Mennonite settlement, Russia, was educated in the Realschule at Weierhof (Palatinate, Germany) 1886-92, and the Predigerschule at Basel, Switzerland, 1893-95. Upon his return to Russia he served as conference evangelist in the Mennonite Church 1897-1905. In 1905 he came to America and served as evangelist in General Conference Mennonite churches until 1907. In 1908 he married Dora Haury, daughter of S. S. Haury, Newton, Kan. He was graduated from the Moody Bible Institute in 1909, received the B.A. degree from the University of Chicago in 1912, the B.D. degree from McCormick Theological Seminary in 1913, and the M.A. degree from the University of Chicago that same year. In 1913-15 and 1918-21 he studied in the University of Berlin, where he also served as pastor of the Salem Deaconess Home. In 1921-30 he taught Bible at Bluffton College and Witmarsum Theological Seminary. During the last twelve years of his life he lived in New York City, continuing his Old Testament studies at Columbia University. He died Oct. 27, 1942. In his younger years he was an outstanding Mennonite evangelist, and in his later life an unusual Old Testament scholar. C.K.

The Bluffton College Bulletin (November 1942); Friese, Brüderschaft, 763; Witmarsum Spirit (March 1926) 11.

Raber, John A. (b. 1873), Baltic, Ohio, Old Order Amish publisher and bookseller. He has published since 1930 the annual Der Neue Amerikanische Calender (q.v.), which contains the "Schriften und Lieder" for the Old Order Amish services, and also a complete address list of Amish ordained men with birth and ordination years, plus a list of Old Colony ministers in Mexico and of Hutterite ministers. In 1926 he published a reprint of Menno Simons' Vollständige Werke. He compiled and published the Family Records of Jacob Raber from Germany and His Lineal Descendants. He is the Amish book supplier for the Middle West and West, especially since L. A. Miller of Arthur, Ill., is no longer active. H.S.B.

Rainham (Ont.) Reformed Mennonite Church in Haldimand County near Selkirk was established in 1825. In 1958 it had 5 members. H.S.B.

Red Rock Lake Bible Camp, on Red Rock Lake, Whiteshell Forest Reserve, 120 miles east of the city of Winnipeg, Man., was started in 1946. It is owned and controlled by a private corporation of Mennonites of Steinbach, Man. It receives active support from the E.M.B. Church of Steinbach, the Evangelical Churches of Steinbach and vicinity, and the Emmanuel Mission Church of Steinbach. F.C.P.

Reference and Council, Committee of, of the Mennonite Brethren General Conference, is a standing committee of nine including the General Conference officers (chairman, vice-chairman, and secretary, and six men elected by the conference) to serve as the spiritual adviser and guardian for the church and all its agencies, in a sense the general supervisory body for the entire denomination, therefore of major importance. It was created in 1927 and made a standing committee in 1936. O.H.

Reinländer Mennonite Church was formed in Southern Manitoba in April 1958 by a conservative minority of some 500 members who withdrew from the 3,500 member Sommerfelder Mennonite Church in Manitoba. Twelve of the sixteen ministers of the Sommerfelder group joined the schismatic party, but the elder Johann Friesen did not leave. The new group elected Cornelius Nickel of Blumenthal as their bishop. Elements of the Sommerfelder group in Saskatchewan sympathize with them. The main body of Sommerfelders retained all the meeting-houses. H.S.B.

Religiöser Botschafter, Der (GCM), the first Mennonite church paper in America, was published and edited as an 8-page 10 x 12 inch biweekly by John H. Oberholtzer (q.v.) at Milford Square, Pa., from Aug. 23, 1852, to Dec. 31, 1855, when it was renamed Das Christliche Volksblatt (q.v.) and its publication taken over by the Mennonitischer Druckverein (q.v.). Bluffton College Library has a complete file. H.S.B.

Rescue Missions, found in all of the larger urban centers to rescue and rehabilitate "down-and-outers" (alcoholics, vagrants, etc.), have also been operated in a few cases by Mennonite groups. The Mennonite Church (MC) has recently established four such missions, the Hope Rescue Mission (q.v.) in South Bend, Ind., the Rock of Ages Rescue Mission (q.v.) in Portland, Ore., the Goodwill Rescue Mission at London, Ont., and the Harbour Rescue Mission at Hamilton, Ont. H.S.B.

Resinx: see Felistis Jans.

Richmond Mennonite Church (MC), formerly National Heights, Richmond, Va., organized in 1951, located in the eastern part of the state capital, is the outgrowth of a survey made by Eastern Mennonite College students. Two Bible schools and two series of tent meetings were conducted in 1948, followed by services held in private homes, then in a rented building. The Virginia Board of Missions and Charities built a brick church in 1955. In 1958 the membership was 36, with Ralph Ziegler as pastor. H.A.B.

Rittman (Ohio) Home for the Aged (MC) was established in 1901, burned down in 1919, but was rebuilt and dedicated Jan. 1, 1939. It is sponsored by the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities. In 1958 it had 41 guests. (Mennonite Community V, 1951, pp. 7-9.) M.G.

Rock Creek Amish Mennonite Church: see Yoder Amish Mennonite Church.

Rock of Ages Rescue Mission (MC), Portland, Ore., was established in 1948 by the mission board of the Pacific Coast Conference. H.S.B.

Rosehill Mennonite Brethren Church: see Munich, N.D., Mennonite Brethren Church.

Rosenberg, a village near Sczerzec, Galicia, Austria, was established in 1786. Daniel Berghthold from Harxheim near Heidelberg, Germany, his son Jakob, and Johannes Rupp from Heppenheim, Palatinate, Germany, settled here during the founding year. They had originally planned to settle at Einsiedel (q.v.). Some of these families moved to America during the migration of the 1870's. C.K.

Peter Bachmann, Mennoniten in Klein-Polen (Lemberg, 1934) 156-58.

Rothrock Mennonite Church (GCM), now extinct, was one of the two meetinghouses of the congregation in Northampton County, Pa., one being Mt. Bethel in Bangor, and the other Rothrock (also called Upper Mt. Bethel) 4 miles east of Bangor. The latter was built sometime before 1794 and before Mt. Bethel. It was a small congregation, the first families having moved into the community c1754, and was supplied by ministers from Bucks and Lehigh counties. The only resident minister was David Henning (1806-81). He was most likely ordained by the Oberholtzer group which divided from the Franconia Conference (MC) in 1847, but withdrew to follow William Gehman and the Evangelical Mennonites (q.v.) formed in 1858. It is presumed that the congregation followed him both times in changing conference connection. H.S.B.

Rural Evangel, since January 1948 called Gospel Evangel, "Organ of the Indiana-Michigan Mennonite Mission Board," first number Oct. 1, 1920, first appeared as a 4-page quarterly 9¼ x 12½ in. in size, published at Scottdale, Pa., and Elkhart, Ind. (later Elkhart was dropped). Size, format, and issue have changed as follows: July 1930 to date, bimonthly issue; beginning January 1944, 8 pages 8 x 10¼ in.; January 1948 to date, 7¾ x 10½ in.; July 1953 to date, 16 pages. Editors have been J. K. Bixler to July 1925; Allen B. Christophel October 1925 to July 1929; J. S. Hartzler October 1929 to December 1945; Ezra Beachy January 1946 to date. H.S.B.

Rural Missions, mission projects for the extension of the church in rural areas, have been a major concern of the Mennonite Church (MC) since the first decade of the 20th century. City missions in this Mennonite body began in 1893 (Chicago), but the conviction soon developed that the genius of the group lay more in rural than in city work. Consequently city missions remained limited in number and often developed more into churches for Mennonites moving into the city. Rural missions, on the other hand, have been projected into non-Mennonite areas where few Mennonites live or are likely to move. Recently, however, colonization evangelism has been promoted as a form of rural missions, a number of families moving into an area to form the nucleus and working force of a new congregation. The general mission board agreed to leave the rural field to the district conference mission boards and confine itself in the home mission field to city missions.

The first M.C. rural missions program was that of the Virginia Mennonites of the Shenandoah Valley, who began an outreach into neighboring West Virginia (q.v.) as early as the time of the Civil War and developed it vigorously after 1900, until by 1957 they had established a total of 21 congregations, missions, and preaching points in this area, with a total of 553 members. In 1958 the Virginia Conference had a total of 51 unorganized congregations, mostly rural. The next vigorous program of rural missions was that inaugurated by the Indian-Michigan Mission Board at its organization in 1911. Its chief work was in Michigan, and ultimately (1958) reached a total of 20 stations, 10 in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan and 4 in Kentucky, while local congregations had established an additional 20 stations, mostly rural. The rural missions had a total of some 500 members, largely of non-Mennonite origin. The conference had a total of 50 unorganized congregations.

Similar programs developed in other conference districts. The Ontario Conference, for example, organized its rural work in 1915 under the Rural Mission Board of Ontario, which was reorganized in 1929 as the Mennonite Mission Board of Ontario to include city work. The Lancaster and Franconia boards have extended their outreach remarkably in rural (and some urban) missions into New York and New England, but also into the South, in Alabama, Georgia, and northern Florida. The total of rural missions operated by all the M.C. district mission boards is over 200, with a membership of over 3,000. This is without doubt the most effective evangelistic effort of this Mennonite body.

The Western Gospel Mission (q.v.), organized in 1944 with headquarters at Steinbach, Man., carries on a vigorous program of rural missions in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and northern Ontario, largely supported by the Evangelical Mennonites (Kleine Gemeinde) and the Rudnerweide group. It has his total of 8 major stations with 15 substations. H.S.B.

Rurer, Hans (Johann) (d. 1542), returned to Ansbach, Bavaria, Germany, as chaplain in 1528 after a brief service at the Liegnitz academy, one of the pillars of the young church in Brandenburg and Ansbach, a capable church inspector and theological councillor to Margrave George, and highly regarded in the learned circles of the town. In 1542 his son Christoph received a scholarship from the Ansbach Stift, both Christoph and his brother having in 1540 received a scholarship of thirty-two guilders—an indication of their father's importance. It was his duty to assist at many Anabaptist examinations. He carried out this role so humanely that the conversion of Anabaptists by pastoral conversation was considered to be his particular gift. Frequently Rurer was sent to other places for this purpose, as for example to Rothenburg on the Tauber (q.v.). E.T.

Hermann Jordan, Reformation und gelehrte Bildung in der Markgrafschaft Ansbach-Bayreuth I (Leipzig, 1917); ML III, 572.

Rusburg, Barend (c1767-May 9, 1856), a son of Jan Rusburg, of Haarlem, and Maria Tirion, was a Dutch Mennonite minister. At first he was employed in the office of his uncle Tirion, a noted bookseller of Amsterdam. Then he decided to study theology. He was a student in the Amsterdam Mennonite Seminary 1801-4, and thereupon served the congregations of Aalsmeer 1805-7, Hengelo 1807-28, and Kampen 1828-51; in 1851, at the age of eighty-five, he retired. Rusburg published a translation of the prophecies of Micah from the Hebrew (Amsterdam, 1832) and a short biography of two Mennonite industrialists in Hengelo, Iets over W(olter) and J(hannes) ten Cate als oprichters der fabrieken (n.p., n.d.). vdZ.

Ruse, Peter: see Reusse, Peter.

Ruseburg, a village in the Löwenhof district in Lorraine(?), listed in the Dutch Naamlijsts of 1775 and 1780 as the seat of a Mennonite congregation, of which Nicolaas Koch was an elder and Abraham Esch a preacher. vdZ.

Rüsser: see also Risser.

Salem Mennonite Church (GCM), now extinct, located just west of Ruff, Wash. (members living scattered in Grant and Adams counties), was organized in 1910 with 32 members, although services were held in various schoolhouses from the beginning of the settlement in 1903. It built a meetinghouse in 1910. By 1920 it reached its maximum of c60 members. This church shared most of its ministers with the Menno Church (q.v.) about 18 miles away, to which most of the remaining members transferred when the dwindling membership (24) decided to discontinue in 1937. H.S.B.

Saltobach (Brazil) Mennonite Brethren Church is a subsidiary congregation to Bouqueirao (q.v.), not fully independent. Its meetinghouse was built in 1955. In 1957 its membership was 35, with Franz Heinrichs as leader. H.S.B.

Salutations. Though salutations are as old as man, nevertheless their peculiar forms express much about the culture within which the greeter lives. The Hebrew greets with the word "Shalom," which is actually a prayer: "May God grant you peace." The Pauline epistles combine the Hebrew greeting with a revised Greek salutation substituting the Christian word "grace" for the Greek word "greetings." Both the Old and the New Testaments agree that when a greeting is extended it is the equivalent of a prayer to God that what it expresses may come into reality in the life of the one saluted. Consequently greetings were withdrawn where they did not find a worthy acceptance (Matt. 10:13), and in the case of false teachers were withheld entirely, for in greeting a false teacher one shared in his wicked work (II John 10, 11).

The Anabaptists took seriously the matter of salutations. In Strasbourg Bucer complained that Marpeck would discuss matters of religion with him in the council chambers, but withheld a civil greeting from him on the street. Furthermore the Anabaptists were noted by their in-group greeting forms. According to Justus Menius they used the Biblical formula: "The peace of the Lord be with you," with the response, "and with your spirit." In Swabia, Thuringia, and Münster this salutation, or one very similar to it, is attested. Spies at times used this greeting to betray members of the group, e.g., Georg Libich.

That this practice was not a mechanical imitation of Biblical practices is clear from Riedemann's (q.v.) statement: "He who salutes and he who is saluted must both be children of peace, if God is to add His blessing." Sebastian Franck (q.v.) says: "Whoever does not belong to their sect they hardly greet, nor do they offer him the hand," and Schwenckfeld (q.v.) concurs by saying, "Indeed they are allowed to greet their brothers, but not the heathen."

Of the Anabaptists of Friesland it was said that they could be recognized by their greeting, "The peace of the Lord be with you!" The response was "Amen," or "May this be true!" with a handshake and a kiss. Or one said, "The peace of God be with you!" and the other replied, "That must be amen." (Vos, Menno Simons, 87.)

In later times Anabaptist-Mennonite practice has been commonly dictated by current cultural practices, although in letters one often finds salutations which are more closely in line with the Biblical salutations. It is a frequent practice in some Mennonite groups to use a formalized opening and closing in letters, which are Christian greetings. At the opening such phrases are used as "Greetings in the Name of the Lord Jesus," or "Greetings with [a Scripture verse is quoted]," and at the closing such phrases as "Yours in Christ," or "Yours in His Service." When the kiss is used as a greeting in the Mennonite Church (MC) and related groups, it is accompanied by a handshake and the phrase "God bless you."

W.K.L.

TA Strasbourg I (1959); Sebastian Franck, Chronica, folio 444 r.; Fritz Heyer, Der Kirchenbegriff der Schwärmer (Leipzig, 1939) 56 f.; Corpus Schwenckfeldianorum XII, 107.

Sanitätsdienst (Sanitary or Hospital Service in connection with the army) was a channel of alternative service for the Mennonites of Russia, originating in connection with the Russo-Japanese War (1902) and developing on a large scale during World War I. The original form of alternative service among the Mennonites of Russia was Forestry Service (q.v.). The Sanitätsdienst came into being through the work of the All-Russian Union of Towns and the All-Russian Union of Zemstvos which functioned parallel to the Red Cross under government supervision during the Russo-Japanese War. Only very few Mennonites served under the organization during the Russo-Japanese War.

When World War I broke out, the Union of Towns and the Union of Zemstvos took the responsibility for "Circuit Hospitals." In 1916 there were 173,000 Zemstvo beds, 70,000 Union of Towns beds, 48,000 Red Cross beds, and 160,000 beds furnished by the Ministry of War. Most of the Mennonites serving in this form became attached to the Union of Zemstvos, which was a civilian organization. Their work consisted of taking the wounded soldiers from the front to the hospitals in the cities in hospital trains. For this service they had to wear a uniform and had to operate under civilian and military orders but were not inducted into the army, although a few volunteered to do so but were refused. In the beginning of the program in 1915, 3,093 Mennonite young men served in the Sanitätsdienst, and in 1916 there were 6,548 in this service, which constituted more than half the total number of Mennonite young men in service. By 1919, after the Revolution, the Zemstvos were liquidated. Something over 100 Mennonite men lost their lives in the service, including those who died of disease.

The original plan of the Czarist policy of universal military conscription for all Russian males was to admit no exceptions. The protest of the Mennonites to the abrogation of their well-established right of exemption from all military service led to a modification of policy providing for noncombatant service. The Military Service Commission's report of early 1872 read, "Those Mennonites who will be called to military service will only be used behind the front in hospitals, military workshops (not munition factories) or similar establishments, and are to be exempted from the bearing of arms." But the Mennonites insisted they could accept no service under the military department in any form. The ultimate provision clearly set up a wholly non-military forestry service. This was not noncombatant military service. The same was true of the Sanitätsdienst. Although it was direct service to the army, it was not a part of the army. Russian military organization apparently had not yet set up a full army medical corps, but left much of the medical service in the hands of the Red Cross and other civilian organization.

The Mennonites of Switzerland were also permitted by the conscription law of 1870 to do medical corps service, but this was noncombatant service in the army. This was and is also true in the United States and Canada.

C.K.

Frank C. Peters, "Non-Combatant Service Then and Now," Menn. Life X (1955) 31-35; Tikhon J. Polner, Russian Local Government During the War and the Union of Zemstvos (New Haven, 1930) 53; Cornelius Krahn, "Public Service in Russia," The Mennonite, June 22, 1943, p. 2; Jacob Sudermann, "The Origin of Mennonite State Service in Russia, 1870-1880," MQR XVII (1943) 23-46.

Sao Paulo (Brazil) Mennonite Church, organized in 1955, meets at the MCC center in Sao Paulo. In 1957 the membership was 20, with Gerhard Rosenfeld as leader.

H.S.B.

Saskatchewan Mennonite Youth Organization: see Mennonite Youth Organization of Saskatchewan.

Saxe-Weimar: see article at end of Supplement.

Schädowitz (Schaidowitz), Moravia, today Zadovice, c1550 owned by the lord Sigmund von Zastri-

zil. In 1553 the Hutterites established a Bruderhof here. The Chronik reports the death of a number of preachers at this place, including Paul Glock (q.v.) 1585, Veit Grünberger (q.v.), and Hans Baldauff 1587. During the Bosckay invasion of 1605-6, and again during the early years of the Thirty Years' War the Bruderhof was plundered by hordes of soldiers not less than eleven times. When the Hutterites were summarily expelled from Moravia in 1622, this Bruderhof also had to be abandoned. (Zieglschmid, Chronik.) H.S.B.

Scharpau, located between the Vistula and the Nogat rivers near the Baltic Coast, was settled by Dutch Mennonites from Danzig. By 1590 Mennonites had already located in this area. In 1618 Jacob Jantzen from Emden settled in Beyershorst. Other places settled here at this time were Altebabke, Jankendorf, Kalteherberge, and Tiegenort. C.K.

Horst Penner, Ansiedlung mennonitischer Niederländer im Weichselmündungsgebiet von der Mitte des 16. Jahrhunderts bis zum Beginn der preussischen Zeit (Weierhof, 1940) 37-43.

Schlettstadt: see Seléstat.

Schneeweiss, Sigmund (also called Simon in TA Bayern I), Lutheran court preacher at Ansbach, Germany, appears in the archival records repeatedly as a zealous opponent of the Anabaptists 1529-35. He participated frequently in questioning sessions. He was apparently the composer of a theological refutation of the Anabaptists written in 1528, found in the Ansbach Archives (A.R.A. 38, 175-83) but not published by Schornbaum. He was a colleague in these matters of Andreas Althamer (q.v.) and Johannes Rurer (q.v.). (TA Bayern I and II.) H.S.B.

Schuhmacher (Schoenmaker), Laurens: see Schu(e)-ster, Lorenz.

Schuster, Heinrich, an Anabaptist, who was imprisoned at Kirweiler (q.v.) in the Palatinate together with Hans Arbeiter (q.v.) for 29 weeks from July 18, 1568. The two had been sent as missionaries to the Palatinate, by the Hutterites in Moravia. The sheriff (Scherg) refused to arrest the two men, saying to the magistrate (Schultheiss), "I will not submit to the order to arrest these men who are much more pious than I; if I had known of the order to arrest them, I would have warned them." (Zieglschmid, Chronik, 427 f.) H.S.B.

Schwenckfeld, Caspar von (1489-1561), a notable and attractive figure in the German Reformation, though he founded no church, was born in Ossig near Lüben, in the principality of Liegnitz, Silesia, Germany. He came from the ranks of the nobility, and studied at various universities (at Cologne 1505-7), but did not secure a degree, nor was he ever ordained, remaining a layman all his life.

Schwenckfeld's spiritual awakening began in 1518 when the first news of Luther's innovations in Wittenberg reached the court of Brieg, Silesia. Soon thereafter he entered the service of Friedrich II of Liegnitz and in 1522 persuaded the duke to launch the evangelical movement in Silesia. His hearing having become impaired, he left the court and returned to his home in Ossig in 1523, continuing, however, to serve occasionally as an adviser to the duke. From the beginning he adopted the role of a lay evangelist and remained such throughout his life, winning followers in Silesia and in South Germany.

In December 1525 Schwenckfeld personally presented his spiritual interpretation of the words of institution of the Lord's Supper to Luther in Wittenberg in a fraternal spirit. Three months later Luther wrote him a vehement condemnation, whereupon Schwenckfeld and the Schwenckfelder brotherhood in Liegnitz advocated suspension of the observance of the Supper until a better understanding of it was forthcoming. Schwenckfeld always acknowledged his indebtedness to Luther.

Schwenckfeld prevented his duke from evicting the Anabaptists from his dukedom. The wrath of King Ferdinand of Austria was stirred by the liberal policies of the duke and Schwenckfeld, their appointment of Swiss theologians to the University of Liegnitz, their toleration of Anabaptists, and the publication of two of Schwenckfeld's books by Zwingli and Oecolampadius; the consequence was a mandate by the king demanding that his Silesian subjects return to the old faith. In order to save his duke from further embarrassment, Schwenckfeld voluntarily left Silesia in 1529 and went to Strasbourg. There he was kindly received by Capito and Bucer and remained until 1533, when he set out on a journey to visit friends in Hagenau, Landau, Speyer, Esslingen, and Augsburg, where he lived with Bonifacius Wolfhart for several months, then to Mindelheim, Kempten, Memmingen, and Ulm. In Ulm he was entertained by the city officials. In July 1534 he returned to Strasbourg. The city having adopted a course of suppression of all dissenters, he left the city permanently, and went to Ulm where he resided with the burgomaster, Bernhard Besserer, until 1539. In 1540-47 he lived in the Justingen Castle of the von Freyberg family, and 1547-50 in the Franciscan Monastery at Esslingen. In 1551-61 he was a homeless wanderer, constantly evading his persecutors. In 1561 Agathe Streicher, a daughter of the widow Helena Streicher, invited him to their home in Ulm to receive her medical services. He accepted the invitation and died in the Streicher home three months later, Dec. 10, 1561.

Most of Schwenckfeld's writings are epistles on devotional, religious, and controversial subjects. During his lifetime, with the assistance of friends, he wrote and published 180 books and booklets, a few of which appeared in the year after his death. Four folio volumes of his letters and one of treatises were printed in 1564, 1566, and 1570. Four additional folio volumes of his letters were preserved by faithful friends. A complete edition of his works is in process of publication, the Corpus Schwenckfeldianorum. Fifteen volumes of this 18-volume edition appeared in 1907-39. Publication of the three final volumes (1558-61) was resumed in 1958.

"In Schwenckfeld's opinion, spiritual life and experience were of greater importance than creeds, theologies, or any church organization bearing his name. He worked untiringly to the end of his life for one united Christian Church founded on faith and freedom of belief, a fellowship of all who love God and Jesus Christ, the ecumenical church." "The Christian Church," said he, "is the company of God's people, of all or of many who with heart and soul are believers in Christ, a willing people drawn by the Father. It is the company of those regenerated souls in all lands who worship the Father in spirit and in truth, whether or not they adhere to one doctrine, confession, and order of worship." Schwenckfeld's doctrine of the church and his basically spiritualistic type of Christianity furnished no adequate basis for organizing his followers into a church and he deliberately chose not to establish a church, even though strong groups of his disciples arose in Silesia (Glatz, Goldberg, Jauer, and Wohlau) and Schwenckfelder conventicles met at various places in South Germany. Consequently no Schwenckfelder church was ever organized in Europe. Schwenckfeld used the term "church" only in the generic sense, never to apply to his own followers or to a local congregation. "Questioned in the evening of his life concerning his following or church, Schwenckfeld says he has no church; that his doctrine, being so vehemently spoken against, has comparatively few adherents; these separate themselves from none who love and fear God, but they assemble in conventicles for prayer, for mutual instruction and consultation. It was never Schwenckfeld's aim or desire to found a church or to have a large following, but it was his steadfast purpose to help mankind to a better knowledge of God through a saner interpretation of Scripture" (Schultz, 358).

The details of Schwenckfeld's life and work are given in an excellent full-length biography by Selina Gerhard Schultz, since 1929 Associate and Managing Editor of the Corpus Schwenckfeldianorum.

In the late 1520's Schwenckfeld had his first contacts with the Anabaptists, but these were Sabbatarian Anabaptists (q.v.), hence Schwenckfeld obtained the erroneous impression that all Anabaptists were legalistic and Judaistic, charges which he repeated in subsequent years. These years were important for the development of his policy of "Stillstand," which meant a temporary halt in the administration of the sacraments. For this practice he gave two reasons: his personal unworthiness to partake, and the lack of an apostolic church in which to partake. Schwenckfeld explicated this policy in his letter about the Lord's Supper drawn up in December 1528. Infant baptism he provisionally rejected because of the abuses connected with it, and not on principle. He certainly would not himself submit to rebaptism, but rather he had come to the conclusion that the outward rites should not overshadow the inner essence. Schwenckfeld's stay in Strasbourg in 1529-33 forced him to take a stand on a number of other issues also, and he there met Martin Bucer (q.v.), Capito (q.v.), Pilgram Marpeck (q.v.), Melchior Hofmann (q.v.), and many other Reformation and Anabaptist leaders and writers. His disposition toward the oppressed caused him to intercede for Melchior Hofmann, and in spite of Schwenckfeld's rejection of Hofmann's Christology the positions of the two men on this point are not very different. Schwenckfeld said both Hofmann and Sebastian Franck drew error from his truth as a spider draws poison from a lovely flower. He met Bernt Rothmann in Strasbourg on one occasion.

Schwenckfeld's Strasbourg Residence. When Schwenckfeld arrived in Strasbourg in early May 1529, he found a city in several respects suited to his search for truth. His views of the Lord's Supper were warmly received by Capito and Bucer; he lived in Capito's home until Capito's wife died in 1531. Here also he formed a close friendship with the Zell family.

Arriving as he did a year after Pilgram Marpeck (q.v.), he found the Anabaptist movement in Strasbourg trying to decide among the various approaches of church reform suggested by Hans Bänderlin, Jacob Kautz, and Melchior Hofmann. Marpeck had taken the initiative in attempting to formulate an Anabaptist church order. In a city where Bänderlin's writings were being read in the Anabaptist assemblies this was not an easy task, and caused a major parting of the ways within the Anabaptist movement, with the Bänderlin group on one side, the Hofmann group on the other, and the Reublin-Marpeck group between them. That Schwenckfeld was aware of these tensions appears from his statement about this time that "the Anabaptists call Bänderlin a squabbler (Zanker)." Schwenckfeld's awareness of the issues raised by Anabaptism appears also in his writings of this period. For example, he was concerned about the question of authority, and in 1530 wrote a short treatise on the question of the keys. The question of church discipline also occupied him during this period. Being a friend of Capito (as was Marpeck) and Bucer he was caught in the middle in the discussions on infant baptism, and took his stand on the position that it was of little importance. Earlier this had also been Capito's and Bucer's position but through their dealings with Hans Denk, Jacob Kautz, and Clemens Ziegler the Strasbourg Reformers were gradually changing their position. Schwenckfeld decried the fact that the only kind of Christians that the Reformation was able to harvest were "water-Christians," and this is a repeated complaint against the Anabaptists also in later years.

Most clearly Schwenckfeld's position toward the Anabaptists is seen in his Judicium de Anabaptistis (ms., 1530), where he takes issue with them on their radical eschatology (Hut, Hofmann?), chides them for being so concerned about events before the beginning of the world and after its end, and expresses the wish that they might spend less time discussing how things are in the presence of God. It is interesting that this same point appeared again in the later controversy between Marpeck and Schwenckfeld when Schwenckfeld chided the Anabaptists for not spending enough time on how matters stand before God. Finally he is critical of the Anabaptists for the haste with which they accept members, and advises them to give new converts catechetical instruction before accepting them. Related to this is his criticism that they appoint a leader so soon after he has become an Anabaptist, without formal instruction. While Schwenckfeld admits that he does not know the Anabaptists too well, and he would wish that they might testify more in the open so that their views could be better known, it is clear that the dividing lines between him and them are already clearly visible at this time. He accuses the Anabaptists of being too much concerned with external baptism and the external letter of the Word, and thus missing its inner and deeper meaning.

Part of Schwenckfeld's criticism of the Anabaptists stems from his program of reform. While in Strasbourg he published two catechisms as a contribution to the Reformation. He also promoted an edition (by Ulhart in 1531) of the Nachfolge Christi, and since mention is made of this book in a letter by Scharnschlager (q.v.) it is possible that the Anabaptists at Strasbourg used this publication. On the question of his relationship to Anabaptism his letter to John Bader in 1530 is most instructive. Schwenckfeld shows the abuses of infant baptism in the past and therefore rejects it. He does not however take the step to adult baptism, but rejects this approach as forced baptism. Baptism is an external thing, and hence cannot be a requirement for church membership since it is not essential for salvation. In the same letter he refers to a booklet written against him by the Anabaptists, and it is quite possible that this refers to either of the two booklets written by Marpeck in 1531, or perchance to the Clare verantwortung (q.v.), which deals with some of his arguments, although its main target was likely Bänderlin.

The clearest evidence of Schwenckfeld's attitude toward Anabaptism is seen in the disruption of his friendship with Wolf Sailer (q.v.), who was also a friend of Marpeck and was drawn more and more into the Anabaptist brotherhood. This common friendship with Sailer is notable evidence that Schwenckfeld and Marpeck were close to each other in this period, although after their tensions came out in the open after 1542, Schwenckfeld gives the impression that at first all had gone smoothly between him and Marpeck. Whether this is merely a rhetorical device or was actually the case because of limited knowledge of each other and little common discussion is not clear. It is difficult to see how they could have been close friends. Schwenckfeld follows the Denk-Kautz spiritualistic line which depreciates the sacraments and all external means, while Marpeck follows the active missionary line of Sattler, Hans Hut, and Schiemer, whose major concern was to build the church of Christ here and now. Schwenckfeld's major concern was always to emphasize the spiritual instead of the external, using the method of discussion (oral or written), while Marpeck's was the building of the church through corporate Bible study and mutual exhortation.

Schwenckfeld and Marpeck Literary Debates, 1540-50. The clash between Schwenckfeldian spiritualism and the Marpeck brotherhood became more serious after 1540. In 1560 Schwenckfeld said, "Pilgrimage was dear to me for many years until he began to warn about me and my teaching." Marpeck appeared surprised at Schwenckfeld's reply to the Vermanung (q.v.) published by his brotherhood, and considered Schwenckfeld's Judicium of 1542 as a malicious attack upon him and the group.

This interchange must be seen in the light of Marpeck's intention to consolidate the Anabaptist movement through the Vermanung. A member of his own brotherhood, Helena von Freyberg, handed a copy of the Vermanung to Schwenckfeld, requesting his opinion of it. On Aug. 21, 1542, Schwenckfeld indicated in a letter that at the request of certain brothers he had written a refutation of the Vermanung. This letter, written to Magdalena Marschalck von Pappenheim (q.v.), was Schwenckfeld's reply to her request for instruction. He was deeply disappointed when the reply was written by Marpeck for Magdalena. The letter was addressed to Helena Streicher, but she was close to Schwenckfeld, and the letter contained a number of points directed against Schwenckfeld; so it is clear for whom it was meant. Two factors contributed to the writing of Schwenckfeld's Judicium: the request of some, and Schwenckfeld's feeling that the Vermanung was directed against him as he explicitly says. In addition to this there were a number of other concerns not mentioned in the Vermanung, to which Schwenckfeld addressed himself in the Judicium. Through a letter from Valentine Ickelsamer he had found out that Marpeck defended the position that it would have been possible for Christ to sin. Also he had heard that Marpeck believed that Christ suffered in Hades after the crucifixion. He was furthermore concerned about the extent to which the Anabaptists were making an idol of the cross. Finally he was disturbed about the "creaturely" emphasis which their view of Christ contained; he would rather see them stress the exalted Christ a little more. Marpeck's intention to form a church he considered futile, and at numerous places Schwenckfeld ridicules the efforts of the Anabaptists to unite their movement.

The discussion of the differences between the Anabaptists and Schwenckfeld has generally revolved around the idea of infant baptism. A study of the writings of the two men reveals, however, that much more is involved. Torsten Bergsten has not only thoroughly discussed the external features of this discussion such as the dates of the various epistles, but has also laid bare the essential theological differences which stood between them. Although the differences may be put in various ways, such as the place of the rites and ceremonies of the church, the normative place of the Bible, etc., this was actually one of the hardest battles ever waged for the existence of a church. While this controversy never came to public attention, its issues have relevance far beyond the scope of the actual participants in the discussion. Schwenckfeld began with a Christology which is basically Greek (Hilary of Poitiers, Cyril and Athanasius are his favorite church fathers) and stressed the reigning Christ. In his discussions of Christ's life he pushed the glorified Christ so far back into His earthly life that His humanity seems to be somewhat reduced in significance. The corollary to this was that all externals were depreciated, whether in the history of the church or in its practical life today. On church discipline, e.g., he said that he would take a matter to the brotherhood if there were such a brotherhood today as Christ described. To this the Anabaptists replied that even if he had lived in the time of the apostles he would not have been satisfied with the church and would have found some reason for criticizing.

The Anabaptists were disappointed in Schwenckfeld's position on the Old Testament. In the beginning of his writing career, especially in his discussions with Bucer, he held essentially the same position as the Anabaptists, viz., that one should not erase the time line between the Old and New Testaments, but rather make the Incarnation the time point of the division. Later in his discussions with the Marpeck brotherhood he took Bucer's position that the Old and New Covenants are the same in so far as Christ's redemption is retroactive even for the patriarchs. In the second part of the Verantwortung the Anabaptists amassed a series of contradictions between the earlier and later Schwenckfeld on the doctrine of the two covenants.

Both Marpeck and Schwenckfeld began with the idea of freedom of religion and the necessity of choice by the individual. Schwenckfeld thought that even the Christian should not be subjected to any kind of restraint (except on a purely individual basis), while for Marpeck the freedom of the Christian was a reality only as he was a part of the body of Christ. Marpeck believed that the church as the body of Christ must continue His sufferings, while Schwenckfeld urged his followers to avoid being persecuted if possible, and it is not by chance that the Schwenckfelders had so few martyrs for their faith. The Anabaptists insisted upon a visible church, whereas Schwenckfeld kept his church invisible.

Schwenckfeld's charge that the Anabaptist movement was legalistic is not entirely justified. He was really showing Marpeck the danger inherent in an approach which takes the Bible seriously, and in so doing he rendered a distinct service not only to Marpeck, but to Anabaptism as a whole. Moreover, Schwenckfeld seems not to have been aware of the danger of his own approach, namely, that so much value will be ascribed to the purely spiritual that the material forms and the historical events to which they point are depreciated and discarded. Certainly for his own group Schwenckfeld rejected the term "church." The reason for this was that he felt that wherever a form comes into being an element of Judaism enters in. This can be illustrated with respect to his view on baptism. After reading the Vermanung he wrote that one of the best things about the book was its clear rejection of the identification of John's baptism of repentance with Christian baptism. And yet despite this recognition of the clear distinction between the two baptisms made by the Anabaptists he repeatedly accused them later on of basing their baptism on the baptism of John; indeed, he accused Hans Klöpfer of basing it on the Jewish rite of circumcision. Since Klöpfer's writing is not extant it is impossible to make a historical judgment, but it would have been highly irregular and practically impossible for an Anabaptist to base his argument for adult baptism on circumcision. Instead, it is likely that Schwenckfeld was here reacting against the necessity of baptism as a covenant witness among Anabaptists, and calling this compulsion a form of Judaism.

Schwenckfeld and the Anabaptists, 1550-61. The Marpeck-Schwenckfeld controversy did not die at once. One hears rumblings of it intermittently throughout the rest of Schwenckfeld's life. A host of people were drawn to Schwenckfeld's quiet conventicle type of Christianity as well as to the more aggressive missionary approach of the Anabaptists, which resulted in a continuing church body rather than in an amorphous group of interested persons. Schwenckfeld was interested in discussion, the Anabaptists in commitment within a covenantal community.

One person who clearly shows this is Daniel Graff. Apparently he was at one time a follower of Schwenckfeld. Arriving in Augsburg, Graff met with the group for discussion, and when the Schwenckfelders insisted that the external rites were not necessary, indeed should not be used, Graff disagreed with their interpretation. In an epistolary exchange between him and Schwenckfeld it became clear that Graff was much more a follower of Marpeck's views than of Schwenckfeld's.

Another person who continued the discussion with Schwenckfeld was Hans Klöpfer von Feuerbach, who was an active Anabaptist missionary and won some Schwenckfelders to the Anabaptist cause. Klöpfer wrote to Ursula Heugin urging upon her the necessity of baptism. She turned the letter over to Schwenckfeld so that he might answer it for her. It is surprising to find Schwenckfeld in this correspondence taking in some respects an opposite position to the one which he had taken in the discussions with Marpeck.

Finally there are a number of references in Schwenckfeld's correspondence of these years to "Schweiger," or "silent" Anabaptists. Sibilla Eisler, one of the women with whom Schwenckfeld was in constant correspondence, had an Anabaptist maid who frequently did not speak at all nor greet anyone. She apparently belonged to this small group of Anabaptists in the area of Allgäu. Schwenckfeld was very critical of their habit of not greeting people and not bearing arms. It is not clear whether these are actually the "Schweiger" to whom Sebastian Franck refers, who were apparently a deviant Anabaptist sect, or whether they are merely called that because they greeted only their fellow Anabaptists. These "Schweiger" are mentioned also in Christoph Erhard's and George Eder's lists of the sects of the late 16th century.

There is no notice in the writings of Schwenckfeld of the death of Pilgram Marpeck, although the former must have known about it. About 1550 he knew that Marpeck had been asked to submit the Testamentelerleütterung (q.v.) to the city council of Augsburg, and was irritated by the fact that Marpeck's services as an engineer had made it possible for him to remain in Augsburg so long. He wrote to Marpeck with sarcastic surprise that he would entangle himself so much in the affairs of this world (alluding to II Tim. 2:4) as to work as an engineer alongside of his work as a leader in the church.

It is apparent that much of the friction between Schwenckfeld and the Anabaptists had a rather slim basis and actually resulted from personality differences and lack of understanding. It would be a mistake, however, to minimize these differences, for at the heart of them lie two entirely different approaches to the problem of the church in the world. Schwenckfeld was a sincere Christian whose piety and integrity were above reproach and who has correctly been termed a Pietist before Pietism. But precisely because he was a Pietist he could not appreciate the Anabaptists and their stress on the visible corporate body of Christ, the church, as taking on a concrete form within a historical context. While he waited for the Spirit to break through with some kind of special revelation, the Anabaptists allowed the Spirit to work through them, using them with their inadequacies and insufficiencies to His own ends. Within this historical context they acknowledged that the Spirit needed to use elements bound by time and space, but they also acknowledged that the Spirit was sovereign, and that no man can force the Spirit to move by going through the motions prescribed in the Scriptures. W.K.L.

Corpus Schwenckfeldianorum, ed. C. D. Hartranft and E. E. S. Johnson, Vol. I-XV (Leipzig, 1907-39); Selina Gerhard Schultz, Caspar Schwenckfeld von Ossig (1489-1561) (Norristown, 1946); E. Hirsch, "Zum Verständnis Schwenckfelds," Karl Müller Festgabe (Tübingen, 1922); H. J. Schoeps, Vom himmlischen Fleisch Christi (Tübingen, 1951); Karl Eicke, Schwenckfeld, Luther und der Gedanke einer apostolischen Reformation (Berlin, 1911); Torsten Bergsten, "Pilgram Marbeck und seine Auseinandersetzung mit Caspar Schwenckfeld," Kyrkohistorisk Årsskrift (Uppsala) 1957 and 1958; Franklin H. Littell, "Spiritualizers, Anabaptists and the Church," MQR XXIX (1955) 34-43; J. Wach, "Caspar Schwenckfeld; A Pupil and a Teacher in the School of Christ," in Types of Religious Experience (London, 1951), also in Journal of Religion XXVI (1946) 1-29; Rufus M. Jones, Spiritual Reformers of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries (London, 1914); F. W. Loetscher, Schwenckfeld's Participation in the Eucharistic Controversy of the Sixteenth Century (Philadelphia, 1907); Hans Urner, "Die Taufe bei Caspar Schwenckfeld," Theologische Literaturzeitung, 1948, cols. 329-42; Wolfgang Knörlich, Caspar von Schwenckfeld und die Reformation in Schlesien (Bonn, 1957); TA Württemberg contains much material on Schwenckfeld.

Selbstschutz (Self-Defense) was a measure taken in some of the Mennonite settlements of Russia during the Revolution and Civil War in 1918-20. The Bolshevik Revolution in October 1917 gradually spread and reached toward the Mennonite settlements, but the major Mennonite settlements of the Ukraine were occupied by the German army between April and November 1918. When it withdrew, since the new Soviet government had not yet established itself in this area, various temporary forms of government came into being, including the group of followers of Nestor Machno (q.v.). They were anarchist in their outlook and set out to destroy any order and to punish those who possessed property. The settlements of Molotschna, Chortitza, Borozenko, and Zagradovka suffered untold hardships from them. The male population of a number of villages was completely annihilated and the food and property were taken. A total of some 600 people were murdered. Old and young women were raped, and consequently venereal diseases spread in the communities. Typhoid fever and other contagious diseases were also brought in. Before the German occupation army withdrew, it had drilled some Selbstschutz units and left weapons and ammunition in some communities. This was prior to the Machno incursions. In some instances the trained young men took up arms to defend their families and their property against the anarchistic bandits when they came, which in turn provoked the bandits to renewed attacks.

The question as to whether it was permissible or even the duty of the young men to defend their families against the bandits caused many discussions and tested the centuries-old principle of nonresistance. Most of the leaders and the majority of the Mennonite population did not support such views. Nevertheless, particularly among the younger generation quite a number felt that in this case it was their duty to take up arms in self-defense.

It is likely that the Molotschna Mennonites were the first to be attacked by the Machno anarchist hordes. Some German officers remained in the Molotschna to lead the Selbstschutz which they had drilled and equipped. One of the significant battles between the Machno group and the Selbstschutz took place twenty miles north of Halbstadt near the Catholic village of Blumental early in March 1919. After a fierce five-day battle, the Selbstschutz unit was overwhelmed by the Machno group which outnumbered them ten to one. Gradually they withdrew to Halbstadt. On March 9 and 10, hundreds of wagons of German refugees (Mennonite, Catholic, and Lutheran) moved toward the Crimea. The regular Red army regiments soon moved in and prevented the Machno bandits from occupying the Mennonite villages, and the Machno followers then subjected themselves to them from March to July 1919. During this time the Mennonites suffered very severely.

A similar fate overtook the Mennonites of the Chortitza (q.v.) settlement and the surrounding villages. Between July and September 1919 the White army under Denikin occupied this territory, fighting for the restoration of the old regime. Mennonites who had already experienced the unpredictable situation during the Revolution and had been molested by the Russian peasantry showed their sympathies toward the Denikin army as they had done before with respect to the German occupation army. Some young men were now drafted into the Denikin army. Late in September the Machno bandits moved into the Chortitza settlement, killing hundreds of people and destroying property and burning houses, particularly the families and homes of those where a member had joined the Denikin army. A most vivid description of the tribulations of the Chortitza settlement is given by the report of the eyewitness, Dietrich Neufeld, in Ein Tagebuch aus dem Reiche des Totentanzes (in English, Russian Dance of Death). According to Karl Stumpp a total of 245 individuals were murdered in the Chortitza settlement in 1919. The Chortitza Selbstschutz was set up at the end of 1918 with Jacob Niebuhr and Jacob Martin Dueck as leaders. It was to include all males 20-35 years of age.

A near-by Chortitza daughter settlement, Nikolaipol (Nikolaifeld) (q.v.), also suffered immeasurably. The village Dubovka (Eichenfeld) lost its male population and four women, a total of 85 persons during one night. As in other cases, the population had shown preference to an orderly government. After the occupation by the German and the Denikin armies, some had joined the Selbstschutz. All this, however, does not justify the measures taken by Machno and his bandits, although it may have helped to provoke them. The Machno raids were simply planless anarchistic behavior which expressed itself in these explosive ways under the slogan, "Anarchy is the mother of all order."

One of the settlements which suffered most severely during the Machno period was Zagradovka (q.v.). Here, too, some of the young men had been trained in the use of weapons during the German occupation and the withdrawing Germans left weapons and ammunition with the Mennonites, which was known to the surrounding Russian population. The next government was that of the Petlura bandits and the Bolsheviki, after which the White army of Denikin moved in. Property which had been taken from the Mennonites by the surrounding Russian population was restored during the occupation of the German army and now again by the White army. The fact that some of the Mennonite young men helped in returning the property was later counted against them. On Nov. 29, 1919, the Machno bandits also occupied the Zagradovka settlement. Horrors which the settlers experienced cannot be described. In one village they killed almost the total male population on November 29. Neufeld reports that 214 people were killed here and six villages were destroyed by fire.

In some of the larger Mennonite settlements like Orenburg (q.v.) and Siberia (q.v.) similar Selbstschutz organizations came into being, although they were directed more against the uncontrollable native groups such as the Bashkirs. Examples of complete nonresistance in hours of immeasurable stress and trial were furnished by the Mennonite settlements of Terek (q.v.) and Central Asia (q.v.). The majority of the Mennonites of all settlements did not approve of any measure of self-defense although they probably did not always clearly protest against its use. Jacob H. Janzen (later of Waterloo, Ont.) at the request of the Bundeskonferenz served as a chaplain for the Mennonite men serving in the White army. He was vigorously opposed to the Selbstschutz. The total number of the Selbstschutz members given by Ehrh as 2,000 seems rather high. The official leaders and conferences regretted this development and stated publicly that it was a "grave mistake." (See particularly the proceedings of the Allgemeine Mennonitische Kongress in Ohrloff, August 1917 and the records of Allgemeine Mennonitische Bundeskonferenz, Lichtenau, 1918.)

On the whole the Selbstschutz organization was a regrettable deviation from a cherished principle of the Mennonites. It was an illustration of the fact that a peacetime principle tested under unusual conditions will likely not find 100 per cent adherence. On the whole, however, it must not be overlooked that only a small percentage arose in self-defense, which was caused by immeasurable suffering. In view of this fact it is probably more surprising that not more of the Mennonites participated. Many of those who were in the Selbstschutz remained in Russia. Among those who joined the White army were the "62" who came to the United States via Constantinople.

Much has been written on the subject of "Machno" and the "Selbstschutz" but primarily as an outburst caused by a mortal wound. No scholarly inquiry has been made into the causes of the attack on the Mennonites, the relationship of this attack to the Selbstschutz, and the factors which led to the organization of the Selbstschutz and the opposition to it. C.K.

Adolf Ehrh, Das Mennonitentum in Russland (Berlin, 1932) 113 ff.; Die Mennoniten-Gemeinden in Russland . . . 1914 bis 1920 (Heilbronn, 1921) 50-101; Heinrich H. Schröder, Russlanddeutsche Friesen (Döllstadt, 1936) 52-62; B. H. Unruh, Die Wehrlosigkeit (an address delivered at the Allgemeine Mennonitische Konferenz on June 7, 1917); P. Arschinow, The History of the Machno Movement, 1918-1921 (published by a "group of anarchists in Germany" in the Russian language, Berlin, 1923); Gerhard Lohrenz, Sagradovka (Rosthern, 1947); Heinrich Toews, Eichenfeld-Dubowka (n.d., Karlsruhe); Johannes Schleuning, Aus tiefster Not (Berlin, 1922); H. Götz, Die Molotschna Ansiedlung (Steinbach, 1950); G. A. Peters, Menschenlos in schwerer Zeit (Scottsdale); Gerhard Toews (George De Brecht), Die Heimat in Trümmern (Steinbach); J. H. Janzen, Aus meinem Leben (Rosthern, 1929); Anton Sawatzky, "Bilder von einst und jetzt. Wer das Schwert nimmt," Mennoblatt XXIX (May 1, 1958) 5 f.

Silk Industry. The chief center of the silk industry in Germany, and one of the most important in Europe, well able to compete with Lyons, has for a quarter of a millennium been Crefeld (q.v.). The establishment and bringing to flower of this industry was chiefly the achievement of a number of Mennonite families, although in recent decades the Mennonite participation in the industry has been greatly reduced. The chief firm was that of F. and H. von der Leyen, established in 1669. The King of Prussia, eager to promote trade and industry, guaranteed the Mennonites absolute religious freedom because of their initiative, industry, and progressiveness and granted the silk firms special favors of various sorts.

The attempt of Johann Cornies (q.v.) to introduce silk raising in the young Mennonite settlements in the Ukraine in the second quarter of the 19th century through the planting of mulberry trees and the growing of silkworms was discontinued when wheat raising became dominant. An attempt was made in 1874-80 in the Peabody area in Marion County, Kan., by the Mennonite immigrants from Russia to introduce the silk industry. H.S.B.

G. von Beckerath, "Die wirtschaftliche Bedeutung der Crefelder Mennoniten . . ." (diss. Bonn, 1951); G. Schmoller and O. Hintze, ed., Die preussische Seidenindustrie II (Berlin, 1892) (Acta Borussica).

Sinclair Church of God in Christ Mennonite Church, Ewart, Man., is located ½ mile west and 3 miles north of Sinclair. In 1959 the membership was 40 and the minister H. H. Barkman. It was first listed in the Yearbook (CGC) for 1954. M.G.

Sinntal Bruderhof, a community of the Society of Brothers founded in 1955 at Bad Brückenau in northern Bavaria, Germany. In 1959 the population was about 60, most of them having returned from Paraguay. The Sinntal Bruderhof earns its living by toymaking and some market gardening and is particularly active in reaching out to the younger generation in Germany. It publishes Der Pflug, the German edition of The Plough. E.C.H.A.

Sipman, Dirck, a well-to-do Mennonite of Crefeld, Germany, one of the three original purchasers of land in Pennsylvania, the others being Jacob Telner and Jan Streypers, each of whom on March 10, 1682 (1683?), bought 5,000 acres of William Penn through Benjamin Furly, Penn's agent in Rotterdam. On Jan. 14, 1686, Sipman bought another 1,000 acres of Govert Remke, who had bought them in 1683. In 1698 he sold his land to Isaac van Bebber. He never went to Pennsylvania. H.S.B.

W. I. Hull, William Penn and the Dutch Quaker Migration to Pennsylvania (Swarthmore, 1935).

Smirna Mennonite Church, Coamo Arriba, Puerto Rico, was founded in 1950 as an outpost of the Bethany congregation. The first converts were baptized Oct. 21, 1951. The meetinghouse was erected in 1953. In 1958 the membership was 19, with Jose M. Ortiz and Lester Hershey as ministers. H.S.B.

Gladys Widmer, We Enter Puerto Rico (Elkhart, 1952).

Smucker, Isaac (1810-93), was the first Amish bishop in northern Indiana. He wrote his name Schmucker in German and Smoker in English, but his son, Jonathan P. Smucker, decided to follow the latter spelling. Isaac Smucker was the great-grandson of Christian Smucker, of Bern, Switzerland, who settled for a time at Montbéliard in France before coming to America. Christian Smucker's son John (1740-1809) married Barbara Stoltzfus of Zweibrücken and settled in Berks County, Pa. John's son Christian (1775-1857) married Elizabeth Stutzman and lived in Lancaster County. On June 10, 1832, Isaac married Sarah Troyer (1811-86) of Holmes County, Ohio. They lived first in Wayne County, Ohio, but in 1838 they settled in Knox County, Ohio, where in the fall of 1838 he was ordained as an Amish preacher. In November 1841 they settled in Elkhart County, Ind., where in 1843 he was ordained bishop, probably by Amish bishops from Ohio. Smucker lived from March 1851 to August 1852 in McLean County, Ill., then settled at the Haw Patch (Topeka) in Lagrange County, Ind., where he lived until his death on Nov. 16, 1893. Personally he retained the dress and appearance of an Amish bishop all his days, but his congregation (now called Maple Grove) gradually became indistinguishable from the Mennonites of northern Indiana. Smucker and Jonas Troyer (from 1854) were the two pioneer bishops in the Elkhart-Lagrange Amish settlement who established the Forks, Clinton (Frame), and Haw Patch (Maple Grove) congregations of Amish Mennonites, which in 1916 merged with the Mennonites of the area. J.C.W.

Society of Brothers, since 1939 the official name of the new Anabaptists (Hutterites, q.v.) founded by Eberhard Arnold (q.v., 1883-1935) in 1922 at Sanerz, Hesse-Nassau, Germany, holding all goods in common like the early Hutterites, though at that time without knowledge of the existence of the continuing Hutterian brotherhood in North America. The term "Bruderhof," first applied to the group when it established the Rhönbruderhof (q.v.) at Neuhoof near Fulda, Germany, in 1926, was a conscious imitation of the historic Hutterite term known to Arnold from his study of the 16th-century Hutterites. Contact was established with the North American Hutterites in 1928, and in 1930-31 Arnold visited their Bruderhofs. In December 1930 he was ordained a Hutterite elder at the Stand-Off Colony near Macleod, Alberta, and commissioned to lead the new German Bruderhof group as a part of the ancient Hutterite brotherhood. In 1955 there was a complete break between the old Hutterites and the new Hutterites, now named Society of Brothers, due largely to the differences in cultural practices as well as in general outlook, the "Brothers" being committed to aggressive outreach in the modern world.

The Rhönbruderhof was closed in 1937 by eviction and expulsion from Germany by the National Socialist government who would not tolerate this "communist" movement. A temporary Bruderhof (Almbruderhof, q.v.) was established in the principality of Liechtenstein, at Silum, Post Triesenberg, in 1933-38. The Cotswold Bruderhof (q.v.), established in 1936 at Ashton Keynes, Wiltshire, England, became the home of the ongoing movement, which had 250 souls by 1938, when a second Bruderhof was established (1939) at Oaksey near by. The further growth of the brotherhood was interrupted by World War II, and the entire group, except several persons left behind to liquidate the property, migrated to Paraguay with the help of the MCC in 1940-41 under heavy pressure from the British government, who feared they would aid the Germans in a possible invasion. Attempts to secure permission to settle in the United States and Canada near the Hutterite colonies there failed. Meanwhile, the representatives who remained in England were able in 1942 to start a new Bruderhof at Wheathill (q.v.) in Shropshire, address Bromdon, Bridgnorth, which in 1959 had a population of 110. A second Bruderhof was founded in Bulstrode, Gerrards Cross, Bucks, in 1958, which had about 100 population in 1959.

In Paraguay meanwhile the Bruderhof settlement called Primavera (q.v.), established in 1941, about 80 miles northeast of Asunción, had grown by 1959 to three village communities with a population of over 650, and a "Bruderhof House" in Asunción. The group is incorporated under the name "Sociedad de Hermanos." In 1954 a small Bruderhof was established at El Arado, Montevideo, Uruguay, which had a population of 60 in 1959.

In 1954 a Bruderhof was established at Woodcrest, Rifton, N.Y., about 50 miles north of New York City, which had grown to 230 (70 members, 115 children, rest guests) by 1959. A second American Bruderhof, Oak Lake, was established in 1957 at Farmington, near Uniontown, Pa., which had a population of 150 in 1959 (50 members, 75 children). In 1958 a third American Bruderhof was established at Evergreen, Norfolk, Conn., which had a population of 60 in 1959 (20 members, 30 children). The Forest River Bruderhof, near Fordville,

N.D., which had separated from the old Hutterites to join the Society of Brothers in 1955, was discontinued in 1957. The newest European Bruderhof is Sinntal, established in 1955 at Bad Brückenau, northeast of Frankfurt, near the East Zone border. In 1959 it had a population of some 60. In 1959 the Society had a total population of some 1,500 in all its communities, of whom some 600 were regular or novice members. The name "community" has now supplanted "Bruderhof" everywhere except in Germany. However, all the communities are completely communal in organization and pattern of life.

The publishing agency of the group is the Plough Publishing House at Bromdon, England (Wheat-hill Bruderhof), established in 1938. The group organ is a quarterly journal, The Plough, first number March 1938, discontinued with III, 1 (spring of 1940), resumed in the spring of 1953, with New Series I, 1. It has parallel editions in the German (Der Pflug), Spanish (El Arado), and Esperanto (La Pugilo). Prior to 1938 three Bruderhof Letters were issued (September 1936, Christmas 1936, and August 1937). Pamphlets are also issued annually.

The Society of Brothers is a Christian brotherhood which holds all property in common, regards all work as of equal worth, upholds a radical peace testimony with complete nonparticipation in war and military service, rejects all swearing of oaths, litigation, and office-holding, practices simplicity of life, is governed by unanimous consent of the members in each community, and bases membership on unity of faith in Christ regardless of race, class, or nationality. Candidates for membership are received on probation for a variable period, after which they are received through baptism by vote of the group on profession of adherence to the principles of the brotherhood. All property is surrendered to the group upon reception into membership. The Society reaches out into the world through mission journeys, education, hospital work, youth work camps, and publication. (See Hutterian Brethren.) H.S.B., E.C.H.A.

Eberhard Arnold, The Hutterian Brothers. Four Centuries of Common Life and Work (Ashton Keynes, 1940); Living Together (an illustrated account of the history, life, and work of the Society of Brothers in three continents) (Farmington, 1958); Ten Years of Community Living. The Wheat-hill Bruderhof, 1942-52 (Bromdon, 1953); Eberhard Arnold, From His Life and Writings, A Witness to Community (Bromdon, 1953); True Surrender and Christian Community of Goods, From the Great Article Book by Peter Walpot 1577 (Bromdon, 1957), reprint from MQR XXXI (1957)

South Danvers Mennonite Church, located 2 miles south of Danvers, was formed by the Hessian Mennonites from Butler County, Ohio, who had begun to have worship in their homes in 1842, then joined the Yoder Amish Church (North Danvers, q.v.), when it built its meetinghouse in 1853 about 5 miles northeast of Danvers. But in 1859 the Hessian group withdrew, building its own meetinghouse in 1864, with c100 members. In 1908 it joined the Central Conference (q.v.). In 1914 the congregation added a rented church building in the town of Danvers, and in 1919 closed the country building. In 1943, with 34 members left, it merged with North Danvers. Early ministers were Michael Kistler 1842-

55, and Christian Gingerich 1855-1908. John Kinsinger and John Gingerich were the leaders from 1885 to the late 1920's. H.S.B.

South Nampa (Idaho) Mennonite Church (Central Conference), now extinct, located in Nampa, was organized in 1908 by a group of members largely of Central Illinois Conference background but with some who had left the Nampa M.C. congregation and a few of G.C.M. origin. Lee Lantz served as pastor 1908-11 and 1918-c32, when the church closed. Maximum membership was 61 in 1926. The congregation joined the Central Conference in 1910. H.S.B.

South Washington Mennonite Church (Central Conference), now extinct, was organized in 1895 as a schism from the East Washington church when the bishop of the congregation, Michael Kinsinger, withdrew with about 100 members because of the German language question; they built their own meetinghouse about 1½ miles south of the mother church. The maximum membership was about 40 in 1921. In 1937 the congregation of some 75 members reunited with the mother congregation, which had moved into the town of Washington, Ill., in 1925 and renamed itself Calvary Mennonite Church (q.v.). John J. Kennel was pastor 1912-32. H.S.B.

Spanish American Mission (CGC), Tucumcari, N.M., had a membership of 27 in 1959, with Dennis Smith as minister. It was first listed in the Yearbook (CGC) for 1950 as the Tucumcari Mission. M.G.

Spiritual Reformers: see Spiritualists.

Spitalmaier, Hans: see Spittelmanier.

Spöhrlin: see Spoerle.

Spörle: see Spoerle.

Starbuck (Man.) Beerdigungskasse: see Mutual Support Society.

Streicher, Helena (d. 1549), was the widow of Hans Streicher of Ulm, a shopkeeper by occupation, and the mother of five daughters, Katherina, Helena, Anna, Maria, and Agatha, and a son, Hans Augustin Streicher. Both Agatha and Hans Augustin Streicher were physicians, the latter serving as city physician (Stadtarzt) in Ulm in 1561. All members of this family were members of the Schwenckfeld conventicle in Ulm, and Schwenckfeld appears to have spent much time in their home, even sending some letters under the names of members of the family. According to Elmer Johnson and Schwenckfeld's biographer, Mrs. Schultz, there remains little doubt that Schwenckfeld died and was buried in the Streicher home in Ulm. There is no evidence that the Streichers were once Anabaptists as is sometimes claimed.

Apparently Helena Streicher and Magdalena Marschalck von Pappenheim were acquainted with each other. The latter became an Anabaptist and represented Marpeck's position to Mrs. Streicher. It is difficult to ascertain how much correspondence moved between these two ladies; most likely all of it reflected the differences between Marpeck and Schwenckfeld. Loserth published Marpeck's letter to Helena (undated), and a reply to her written by Magdalena Marschalck exists in manuscript form in the Zürich Library.

The Streicher family appears to have been outstanding in its piety and is noteworthy for its hospitality and its attitude of mediation between Schwenckfelders and Anabaptists. Much of the strength of the home must have come from this noble widow, Helena Streicher. W.K.L.

Strepers: see Streypers.

Studienkommission, Russlandmennonitische, a committee of three Mennonite leaders of the Ukraine, from the Molotschna settlement, appointed in 1919 after the terrible experiences of the Mennonites of Russia in World War I, the Revolution, and their aftermath, apparently by the Allgemeiner Mennonitischer Kongress (q.v.). The primary purpose of the Commission was to report to Western Europe and to America on conditions among the Mennonites in Russia and to study settlement possibilities abroad. The members were A. A. Friesen, chairman, B. H. Unruh, secretary (both teachers in the Kommerzschnule in Halbstadt), and C. H. Warkentin, a merchant. Johann Esau, former mayor of Ekaterinoslav, then living in Berlin, Germany, offered to join the group. Friesen and Unruh, together with H. H. Epp of Chortitz, had been sent to Germany in the summer of 1918 as a commission to study the possibilities of repatriation to Germany, where they learned that such a plan was impossible.

The Studienkommission members left Russia Jan. 1, 1920, via Constantinople, and after spending some time in Germany and Holland consulting Mennonite leaders there, reached New York on June 13. Their urging led to the founding of the Mennonite Central Committee at Elkhart, Ind., in July, and the Canadian Central Committee at Rosethorn, Sask., on Oct. 18, 1920 (became the Canadian Mennonite Board of Colonization May 17, 1922). As the only preacher in the group, Unruh was sent on a deputation tour of Mennonite churches in the United States and Canada (accompanied for a time by Esau, who soon returned to Berlin, to settle later in California), while Friesen studied settlement possibilities in the western states and provinces and in Mexico. Unruh returned to Europe on Nov. 1, 1920, while Friesen and Warkentin stayed in Canada. Unruh then set up in Karlsruhe a permanent office for Russian Mennonite emigration matters, where he lived until his death in 1959.

The formation in December 1920 of the Dutch Mennonite Algemene Kommissie voor buitenlandsche Nooden at Rotterdam was due in part to a proposal by Unruh. A. A. Friesen was for many years secretary of the CMBC. His files, with much material on the Studienkommission and the immigration of the Russian Mennonites, are now in BeCL. Unruh's files have been lost, but his unpublished manuscript "Fügung und Führung" (copy in CMBC, MCC, and GCL) contains much information on the same area. H.S.B.

Sumerauer, Leonhard: see Summerauer, Leonhard.

Summer Camps: see Camps, Mennonite Church.

Sunchild Indian Mission (CGC) is located 38 miles northeast of Rocky Mountain House, Alberta. In 1958 it had 13 members, with Dewey Unruh as its superintendent. It was first listed in the Yearbook (CGC) for 1949. M.G.

Sunday School Conference (Convention), a meeting of Christian workers interested in Sunday-school work, continuing over a day or more, a prominent feature of church life in most North American Mennonite groups in the 20th century. The first known such meeting was the Sunday School Convention in the Eastern District Conference (GCM) on Oct. 2, 1876, sponsored by A. B. Shelly (q.v.), and held annually thereafter for many years.

In the Mennonite Church (MC) the first S.S. Conference was held at Kitchener, Ont., in 1891, followed by a general S.S. Conference Oct. 5-8, 1892, held at the Clinton Frame Mennonite Church near Goshen, Ind. This was an epoch-making meeting with unusual influence on missionary development as well as on the growth of the S.S. movement. After a second general conference, held at the Zion Church, Bluffton, Ohio, in 1893, and a third at the Forks Church near Middlebury, Ind., in 1894, the general meetings were replaced by district conferences, organized according to the church conference area: Indiana-Michigan (1895), Ohio (1895), Southwestern Pa. (1895), Kansas-Nebraska (1895), Illinois (1896), etc. Ontario operated its annual conferences apparently without interruption from 1891 on. These annual conventions, usually lasting two days and later often held in a tent purchased or rented for the purpose, and attended by large crowds, became great centers of inspiration, stimulus, and progressive influence. In the 1940's the name of most of these conferences was changed to "Christian Workers' Conference" or "Christian Education Conference." In some areas they have been held attached to the annual church conference or the annual district mission board meeting. Beginning in 1952 (at Goshen) national S.S. conventions have been sponsored by the Commission for Christian Education quadrennially. Some local congregations or groups of congregations established quarterly or semiannual S.S. meetings on a Sunday afternoon and evening. Many of these are still running after 50 years, but some have died out. In the Lancaster Conference since 1934 annual S.S. meetings have been held with different congregations across the conference, recently called Christian Nurture meetings since they are sponsored by the Christian Nurture Committee of the Conference, organized in 1948.

Sunday-school conventions are also popular in the Mennonite Brethren Church, especially in Canada, where district conventions are held annually in each province where there is an organized M.B. Conference. In the General Conference Mennonite Church, Sunday-school conventions have been held particularly in the prairie states and provinces, though not on a permanently organized basis. Other Mennonite groups have also sponsored such conventions, though not always regularly.

Sverdlovsk, district and city (formerly Ekaterinburg), located in Asiatic Soviet Russia, lie on the western slopes of the Ural Mountains. Forest and mineral wealth have transformed it into an industrial region. Chief cities are Sverdlovsk, Nizhni Tagil, and Krasnouralsk. Many Mennonites have found their home in this region since the days of the exile and evacuation before and during World War II. They are primarily located in the industrial areas. (See Siberia.) C.K.

Taufers: see Tauffers.

Theater, Mennonite Attitude Toward the. The Mennonites of Europe and America originally rejected the theater completely as "a worldly amusement," and most of the Mennonites outside of Europe still do so. The Waterlander group of Dutch Mennonites gave up their opposition to the theater quite early, and Joost van den Vondel (q.v.), the noted Dutch poet and dramatist, was a deacon of the Waterlander Church in Amsterdam 1616-20. Jan Theunis (q.v.), a member of the same congregation, kept a kind of amusement place, a combination of theater, museum, and wineshop, which was frequented by many Mennonites. By the end of the 18th century the Lamist Mennonites of Holland took full part in the Amsterdam amusements including the theater. In Northwest Germany the opposition to the theater faded out in the 19th century as was the case to some extent in West Prussia and the Palatinate, though not in the congregations in the Badischer Verband (q.v.). In Baden, France, Switzerland, and Russia, opposition to the theater has been maintained.

In North America the ban on the public theater has been maintained in most groups. In the General Conference Mennonite group there is no ban in the strict sense although attendance is not widespread and is frowned upon. Exceptions have been made in some groups regarding attendance at the opera, Shakespearean plays, etc. The ban on the theater was usually extended to the commercial motion picture theater when it arose. Although the ban has not always been strictly maintained, attendance at commercial movies is generally frowned upon.

No known case of a Mennonite entering the profession of acting has come to public notice. The Anabaptists who had formerly been participants in the drama guilds in Holland known as the Rederijkers dropped out of such groups when they were converted to Anabaptism (e.g., David Joris).

The performance of dramatics in Mennonite schools and colleges, once banned or frowned upon, has come to be common in most Mennonite colleges, though not in some of the schools of the Mennonite Church (MC). Youth groups in some congregations in some Mennonite bodies, e.g., G.C.M., frequently put on plays with religious or ethical content. It has been quite common to include dialogues and playlets in Christmas programs given by Sunday-school children.

A number of Low German folk plays have been written by Jacob H. Janzen and Arnold Dyck which have been frequently performed in Mennonite schools and communities.

The literary materials written by American Mennonites giving the grounds for the Christian's opposition to the theater, as well as sermons and addresses on the subject, have generally stressed the following points: the low ethical quality of many plays, the association of the commercial theater and its actors with low standards of morality in many places, the insincerity of "acting a part," the temptations to worldliness connected with either the drama or the players, a general opposition to commercialized entertainment and amusements. Very little has actually been published by Mennonites. Among the brief tracts or booklets in this field should be mentioned: Paul Erb, The Theater (1928), and C. F. Derstine, Hell's Playground, Theaters and Movies (1921).

For a report on the Anabaptist and Mennonite theme in dramatic literature, see Literature.

H.S.B.

Thomashof, Bibelheim, located about 3 miles east of Durlach, in Baden, Germany, is an influential Mennonite retreat center and vacation home (Erholungsheim), also the mother house of the deaconess work of the Verband (q.v.). Purchased in March 1924 by a group of Mennonite ministers and laymen from David Horsch, the owner of the adjacent estate of Lamprechtshof, with support from the congregations of the Verband, it is managed by a self-perpetuating board of trustees known as the Bruderrat. The original property, consisting of a remodeled wayside inn and a small chapel and about an acre of ground, was augmented in 1955 by a modern 30-bed dormitory. Christian Schnebele has been the housefather from the beginning. Annually a series of short winter Bible "courses" for youth and for ministers are held, in addition to special conferences. The institution is largely self-supporting through paying guests who come for periods of rest and refreshment. H.S.B.

Tiessen, Peter, Jr. and Sr., were ministers and elders of the Danzig Mennonite Church during the time of transition from the lay to the salaried ministry. Peter Tiessen Jr. was elected minister at the age of thirty-six, Aug. 17, 1800, to help his father, Elder Peter Tiessen Sr., who had been elected minister in 1774. It was during their ministry that the Frisian and the Flemish churches were united in 1808. When the father died, March 17, 1825, the son was elected elder. He died Oct. 1, 1826, and was succeeded by Jacob van der Smissen (q.v.), the first theologically trained minister of Danzig. C.K.

H. G. Mannhardt, Die Danziger Mennonitengemeinde (Danzig, 1919) 134-35, 151-57.

Tilsit, formerly district city in east Prussia, now named Sovetsk, of the Kaliningradsk region of Soviet Russia, is located on the left bank of the Neman River. A "Mennonite Congregation of Lithuania near Tilsit" was listed for decades. The history of this congregation and settlement is found in the articles Lithuania and Gumbinnen. C.K.

Toews, Johann, was elected minister of a Mennonite church in West Prussia in 1832 and elder in 1853. In that year he joined the Mennonites who migrated to Russia and established the Trakt Mennonite settlement (q.v.) and church, of which Johann Wall (q.v.) was the elder. Johann Toews functioned as honorary elder. Little is known about his life. (Friesen, Brüderschaft, 719.) C.K.

Tomsk, district and city, are located in Asiatic Russia, on the right bank of the Tom River near its junction with the Ob River. The city is connected with the main line of the Trans-Siberian Railroad, and is an educational center founded in 1602. Formerly the Barnaul (q.v.) or Slavgorod (q.v.) Mennonite settlement was located in the province of Tomsk. It is now part of the Altai district of the R.S.F.S.R. Since the period of exile and World War II many Mennonites have been transplanted to the Tomsk district and city. Details about their number, location, and occupation are not known. (See also Siberia.) C.K.

Transdanubia, an old name for the westernmost part of the former kingdom of Hungary, roughly the comitat of Sopron-Odenburg, today in the main the Austrian province of Burgenland. It has long been known that Anabaptists existed here in the 16th and 17th centuries. Since, however, the Hutterite chronicle mentions this area but slightly, and pertinent research has been carried out exclusively in the Magyar language, Western scholars have much neglected this entire area. The country was settled primarily by German frontiersmen (history speaks of the "Militärgrenze," i.e., a strip of land toward Turkey where every farmhouse was at the same time a small fortress). Because of the Turkish invasion of Balkan countries, many Croatian peasants sought refuge here too. Popularly they were known as Krovoten or Krabaten. Finally, here as elsewhere, the greater part of the land was in the hands of Hungarian manorial lords, and of them it is known that they were rather friendly toward the Anabaptists because of their good craftsmanship and husbandry. Thus it is no small wonder that the archives of these noble families contain many references to Anabaptist craftsmen (mainly potters; see Ceramics) and barber-surgeons (see Physicians, Hutterite).

Alexander Payr in his book Protestant Church History of Oedenburg (in the Magyar language) claims that city records mention Anabaptist craftsmen on and off from 1547 to 1635. Of course it could be argued that these men were but "loaned out" single brethren from Slovakia who went to work everywhere, without however establishing Anabaptist colonies. But at least in one instance this seems to be contradicted by a passage in the Hutterite Chronicle itself which, for the year 1632, records the death of one brother Lorenz Putz, "Diener des Wortes," at Gissingen, who had served the congregation beyond the Danube in "Krabatenland" for about one year (Chronik, 815). Gissingen is to be identified as today's Güssing in Burgenland; a brotherhood settlement must have existed there for some time. Incidentally, the name Putz is well known for the continued craftsmanship of the family in the field of ceramics.

Local research has also proved the existence of Anabaptists in the small town of Güns in the same general area around 1660 (see the article Güns by Loserth, who got his information from a local church historian). Noteworthy is also a remark by the late Professor Loesche (1926) that the Lutheran minister of the city of Schlaining, Burgenland, once found in the hands of playing children an old Anabaptist codex of 1612, incomplete and poorly preserved, which contained eleven Anabaptist hymns and several medical recipes. The book is definitely of Hutterite origin and points again to a former presence of these brethren in Transdanubia. A Hungarian scholar informed this writer that at least three places mentioned in the Hutterite Chronicle were erroneously identified by scholars as Moravian or Slovakian, in reality being Transdanubian villages, thus indicating the existence of Bruderhofs in this area. The names are Freischütz, Kreutz, and Gätta; documentation will be given in forthcoming publications. Most important of all, however, the same expert claims that many of the beautiful ceramic tablewares for the nobles (now in museums) were produced in potteries in Transdanubia, as can be gathered from inscriptions on these pieces.

All this seems to indicate that Anabaptists (obviously of the Hutterite variety) were more widely spread in Eastern Europe than was formerly known, mainly in the century 1550-1650. No doubt both pottery and archive records will yield still more information as research in this area proceeds and becomes better known. R.F.

This article is based in the main on information by the Hungarian scholar Bela Krisztinkovich of Budapest, an expert in the field of ceramics. See also Zieglschmid, Chronik, 815; G. Loesche, Archivalische Beiträge zur Geschichte des Täuferturns (Vienna, 1926) 51-54; Alexander Payr, A. Sopron ev. egyházakcsy története, p. 91.

Tri-State Bible Camp, located on Lake Shetek near Currie, Minn., is operated by a number of Mennonite churches around Mountain Lake, Minn., Luton, Iowa, and Marion, S.D. H.S.B.

Twenty-Sixth Street Mission, now extinct, located at 26th St. and Halstead St., Chicago, Ill., was founded in 1906 by A. M. Eash under the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities (MC). A new building was erected in 1910. In 1924 the building was sold to the Central Conference, which took over responsibility for the work. A. M. Eash served continuously as pastor 1900-35, except for some interruptions in 1919 ff. The high point of membership was 72 in 1935, with over 300 in the Sunday school. In 1940 the work was closed and the building sold. H.S.B.

Tyrol: see Tirol.

Tyumen, district and city, Asiatic Soviet Russia. The city is located 125 miles southwest of Tobolsk and 190 miles east of Sverdlovsk. Established in 1585, it became the first Russian town east of the Ural Mountains. Tyumen district was created in 1945 with Tyumen city as capital. Many Mennonites were sent to this area during the period of exile and evacuation from European Russia. No definite information is available regarding their number nor the areas of concentration. (See Siberia.)

C.K.

Uhrmacher, Hans (Felix), of the Marpeck Anabaptist group in Moravia, was the son-in-law of Leupold Scharnschlager (q.v.), having married his daughter Ursula in 1531. They apparently met in Strasbourg where Uhrmacher also became an Anabaptist. In Leupold Scharnschlager's letter to Michel Leubel (q.v.) at Speyer in 1532 he sends greetings from Hans Uhrmacher, who had been to see Leubel at Speyer several times, recently. In 1533 Scharnschlager's wife wrote a letter to her brother stating that the young couple was at present in Moravia. Apart from a few brief visits they appear to have lived in Moravia the rest of their lives and Uhrmacher may well be the "Hans von Strasbourg" referred to in the Hutterian Chronicle who sprang to the defense of Gabriel Ascherham when Jakob Hutter spoke against Gabriel.

A letter from Hans Uhrmacher to his father-in-law dated Oct. 29, 1538, shows that he owed to Scharnschlager his conversion to Anabaptism. It indicates also that a very close spiritual relationship existed between them. The letter was written from Austerlitz (printed by Schiess) and implies the prospect of an imminent visit between the families. A local witness reported that Hans repaired the village clock at Ilanz; this must have happened between 1546 and 1559. In 1538 Hans states that he and his wife had just gone through a siege of illness and unemployment.

Uhrmacher apparently later lived in the town of Znaim (q.v.). On April 18, 1559, at the third discussion (as established by Jarrold Zeman) between the Pilgramites and the Moravian Brethren, the spokesman for the Anabaptists was a brother who had earlier lived in the mountainous country (Müller thinks it was Tirol). He had come across a copy of the apology of the Moravian Brethren and tried to find out more about them by moving to Moravia. Because he was a skilled watchmaker the residents of Znaim retained him when King Ferdinand ordered the expulsion of all Anabaptists from the Moravian cities (probably 1547-54). It is reported by the Moravian recorder that the Anabaptists of Znaim were "a little more peaceable and understanding" in their conversations with the Moravian Brethren than the Anabaptists at Eibenschitz had been.

One problem in identifying this Uhrmacher with Hans Felix is the place of residence. The letter written to Scharnschlager is dated from Austerlitz, while the Moravian Brethren report said that he was living at Znaim, having settled there when he arrived in Moravia. It is possible that this report is not reliable and that Uhrmacher changed his place of residence.

There is other evidence that the Marpeck Brotherhood was most anxious to conduct conversations with the Moravian Brethren, and it thus seems likely that the renowned Uhrmacher so eager to converse with them was indeed Scharnschlager's son-in-law. If this is the case, the Marpeck group did not restrict its conversation to fellow Anabaptists, but also sought an interchange of thought with the Moravian Brethren. As in their discussions with the Reformed party, the initiative came from the Anabaptists; they did not give up immediately even though the areas of disagreement were too great by this time to make conversation fruitful.

Uhrmacher's death occurred before that of Scharnschlager (as a letter of the latter's wife indicates) and hence must be placed between 1559 and 1563.

W.K.L.

J. Th. Müller, "Die Berührungen der alten und neuen Brüderunität mit den Täufern," Ztscht für Brüdergeschichte IV (1910) 197-207; T. Schiess, "Aus dem Leben eines Ilanzer Schulmeisters," Bündnerisches Monatsblatt (1916) 73-89; TA Baden-Pfalz, 420; Zieglschmid, Chronik, 116.

Union Avenue Mennonite Church (MC), the name used for the Mennonite Home Mission (q.v.) from 1955 to 1957 when it moved to Englewood and became the Englewood Mennonite Church (q.v.). The address was 1907 S. Union, Chicago. M.G.

United Brethren in Christ Church, founded in 1800 by Philip Otterbein, who came to America in 1752 as a missionary of the German Reformed Church, and Martin Boehm, a former bishop of the Mennonite Church in Lancaster County, Pa., who had been excommunicated in 1777 because of teaching Methodistic doctrine. Otterbein and Boehm were elected the first bishops of the church. Boehm took a considerable group of Mennonites with him into the new church, and others joined the church later at various places. Christian Newcomer, an early prominent leader in the U.B. church, was one of the Mennonite ministers to transfer. In 1941, when it had a membership of c381,000, it merged with the Evangelical Church (q.v.) to form the Evangelical United Brethren Church. H.S.B.

Unruh, Benjamin Heinrich (1881-1959), outstanding Russian Mennonite teacher and later emigration leader, was born at Timir-Bulat (German, Philippstal), Crimea, Russia, on Sept. 17, 1881, the son of Heinrich Benjamin Unruh (q.v., d. 1883) and Elizabeth Wall (an older brother was Abraham H. Unruh). His father was the elder of the Mennonite Church at Karassan, Crimea, but Benjamin was baptized a member of the M.B. Church at Spat at the age of 18. Benjamin attended the Orloff Zentralschule, Molotschna, followed by the pedagogical course at Halbstadt. He passed the teachers' examination at the Russian secondary school at Simferopol, and in 1899 the Russian state examination at Kharkov. His education was crowned by attendance at two higher schools in Basel, Switzerland, followed by the University 1900-7, and the Predigerseminar, parallel in the earlier years. He received the Licentiate in theology, which was equivalent to the doctor's degree, in Church History at Basel, and the honorary Doctor of Theology at the University of Heidelberg in 1937. He also served for a number of years as lecturer in Russian language and literature at the Karlsruhe Technische Hochschule.

Unruh's career in Russia was that of teacher, serving at the Halbstadt Kommerzschule, where he taught German and Religion. He wrote a Bibelkunde for the Mennonite schools of Russia which caused some controversy in Mennonite circles there. In 1920 he was appointed a member of the Studienkommission (q.v.) chosen by the Mennonites of Russia to seek out emigration possibilities in foreign countries. As such he spent most of 1920 in western Europe and North America. After his return to Europe in November 1920 he settled in Karlsruhe, Germany, living most of the time in the suburb of Rüppurr. He died in a hospital in Mannheim on May 12, 1959. His first wife (in 1907) was Frieda Hege (d. 1946), a daughter of Elder Christian Hege of Breitenau; of this marriage eight children were born. His second wife was Paula Hotel, daughter of Elder Johannes Hotel of Batzenhof near Durlach.

From 1920 to the end of his active days, c1955, Unruh served the interests of his Russian Mennonite brethren in emigration and resettlement, working in this respect directly as commissioner for the Canadian Mennonite Board of Colonization (q.v.) for the emigration to Canada 1921-25 and later, and for the MCC in emigration to Paraguay 1930-33. He long continued a close relationship with the new settlements in both countries by correspondence and the writing of articles in the German Mennonite press. In Germany he was a member of numerous organizations dealing with German refugees from Russia; e.g., Brüder in Not (q.v.) 1930 ff., and Landsmannschaft der Deutschen aus Russland (q.v.). In his varied service in this field he became widely known and highly regarded and rendered extraordinary service. Although not an ordained minister (he refused ordination unless he could be ordained by all branches of the Mennonites in Russia), and he never transferred his membership to a Mennonite congregation in Germany, he was an able speaker and preacher and was a well-known figure at Mennonite conferences in Germany.

Unruh was the author not only of numerous articles in the German Mennonite press of Germany and Canada but of a major scholarly work, Die niederländisch-niederdeutschen Hintergründe der mennonitischen Ostwanderungen im 16., 18. und 19. Jahrhundert (Karlsruhe-Rüppurr, 1955). His "Fügung und Führung im Mennonitischen Welt-Hilfswerk 1920-1933, Streiflichter in persönlicher und dienstlicher Rückschau," completed in 1958, has been deposited in manuscript with the Mennonite Central Committee at Akron, Pa., and the Canadian Mennonite Board of Colonization at Saskatoon, Sask. H.S.B.

"Benjamin H. Unruh" (an autobiography), Der Bote XXVIII (1951), Sept. 5, 1 f.; Sept. 12, 1-3; Sept. 19, 2 f.; Sept. 26, 2 f.; Horst Quiring, "Benjamin H. Unruh zum 70. Geburtstag," Gesch.-Bl. 1952, 27-34; Chr. Schnebele, "Auf Benjamin Unruh's Tätigkeit," Menn. Jahrbuch, 1952, 45-47.

Urteil von dem Schwert, Das, an important early Moravian Anabaptist writing of 1529, discovered in manuscript form in Switzerland in 1951, written by Clemens Adler (q.v.). H.S.B.

Valley Mennonite Brethren Church, Pacoima, Cal., was established in 1956 as a Home Missions congregation. It had 23 members in 1959, with James P.

Wiebe as pastor. Plans had been made to break ground for a meetinghouse in 1959. M.G.

Vancouver (B.C.) Mission (GCM) was organized March 18, 1956, with 63 charter members. In 1958 it had a membership of 77, with Peter Kehler as pastor. M.G.

Vetter, Jakob (1872-1918), a German Pietistic evangelist, at first working in Oberhessen under the Chrischona organization, then after 1902 in the Tent Mission (Zeltmission), which he founded. Charles G. Finney was his inspiration and model in evangelization. He rejected the pentecostal movement and universalism, and was in general a well-balanced person. He exerted a strong influence among the Swiss Mennonites, particularly in the Jura where he often held Bible conferences. According to Neff (ML I, 616), he was also received among the Mennonites of Württemberg and the Palatinate and exerted considerable influence there. H.S.B.

Hans Bruns, Jakob Vetter, der Gründer ver Zeltmission (Giessen and Basel, 1954).

Victoria Avenue Mennonite Church (GCM), 1409 Victoria Ave., Regina, Sask., is not yet organized as a congregation but in 1959 had approximately 50 adult participants. Its church was bought from the Mormons in 1955. Norman D. Bergen was the pastor in 1959. M.G.

Villa Guayra (Brazil) Mennonite Brethren Church was organized in 1957 as a daughter congregation of Bouqueirao (q.v.). In 1957 it had 58 members, with Johann Froese and Abram Klassen as associate ministers. H.S.B.

Vine Street Mennonite Church: see Lancaster Mennonite Mission.

Vineland Burial Society (Vineland Beerdigungs-Kasse), Vineland, Ont., was established in 1934. Though it serves primarily Mennonites in Ontario, it has members in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, and Kansas. In 1953 it had approximately 2,500 members and paid out $1,815 at the rate of $273 per death. M.G.

Virgil Plattner: see Plattner, Virgil.

Virginia Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities (MC), organized 1916, incorporated 1919, consists of 21 members elected by the bishop districts and certain congregations of the Virginia Mennonite Conference. In 1959 it operated nine home mission stations (six city missions in Virginia, one city mission in Tennessee, and two rural missions in Kentucky). It also operated foreign missions in Jamaica and Sicily. Its official organ is the Missionary Light. H.S.B.

Virginia Mennonite Home, Inc., Harrisonburg, Va., a 40-bed home for the aged, was established in 1954 under a local Mennonite (MC) board. H.S.B.

Virginia Mennonite Home Mission Board (MC) of the Middle District was organized in 1893 as a committee of six members chosen by and working under the Ministerial Council of the Middle District (q.v.) of the Virginia Conference. Its work is largely in the mountains west of Harrisonburg and on into West Virginia. H.S.B.

Vishenka, a location in the northern Ukraine c150 miles northeast of Kiev, where the Hutterites who were fleeing persecution in Walachia first settled in 1770 on the estate of Count Rumjantsev (q.v.). Here they lived until 1802 when they moved on to crown land at Radichev (q.v.), 10 miles north. H.S.B.

Volckaimer, Kilian, a furrier of the village of Grosswalbur in Franken, Germany, who was won by Hans Hut (q.v.) for Anabaptism in the summer of 1526, and became an active Anabaptist traveling apostle. With Hut and other colleagues including Eukarius Kellerman, Joachim Mertz, and a certain Sebastian, he traveled along the valley of the Main River and its tributary valleys, inviting men and women to the Anabaptist meetings, where Hut was the chief preacher. They won many followers, first in the district of Königsberg in Franken, and then in Thuringia proper. The last recorded trace of Volckaimer is found in the letter of the Nürnberg city council to Margrave Casimir of Brandenburg, dated March 26, 1527. (Wappler, Thüringen; TA Bayern I.) H.S.B.

Volk auf dem Weg is an 8-page monthly, published since 1951 by the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der Ostumsiedler, Stuttgart, and since 1955 by the Landsmannschaft der Deutschen aus Russland. No editor is named. The paper contains numerous contributions dealing with the Mennonites of Russia, including some by B. H. Unruh and Peter Froese (set in BeCL). C.K.

Walachia, the southern part of Rumania between the Carpathian Mts. and the Danube; its capital is Bucharest; the population is Greek Orthodox. In the 18th century it was a principality under Turkish suzerainty. In Anabaptist history it has significance only for the years 1767-70, when Hutterites fled from Transylvania (q.v.) and tried to establish a new Bruderhof in Walachia, hoping for more toleration in Turkish than in Hapsburg lands. In November 1767 they settled first at a place called Choregirle, south of Bucharest, but since much sickness occurred (typhoid fever), they moved in 1768 to Presetchain in a fertile area also near Bucharest. But the great Russo-Turkish War of 1768-74 brought unbelievable hardships upon the brotherhood. Johannes Waldner, the writer of the Klein-Geschichtsbuch, who was in that group, describes in great detail all the terrible experiences, plundering and brutal treatment by Turks and marauding Rumanian troops. They lost a great part of their possessions, and finally had to flee into near-by woods to save their lives. Thereupon the brotherhood decided to leave this country. The commanding Russian general in Bucharest was kindly disposed to them and recommended that they look for permanent settlements in the Ukraine near Kiev, where religious toleration was granted. Thus they sold what was left of their houses and on April 10, 1770, began their long trek northward through Moldavia into the Ukraine (see map in ME II, 858). In spite of all their hardships the brotherhood remained intact and preserved its communal way of living; also its precious books and sermon notes were saved and taken along into their new settlements in the Ukraine. (See Vishenka and Radichev.) (Zieglschmid, Klein-Geschichtsbuch, 303-19.) R.F.

Waldshut, Baden, Germany, a town of c7,000 pop. on the Rhine c30 miles east of Basel and c25 miles northwest of Zürich, was the seat of an Anabaptist congregation from April to December, 1525. Dr. Balthasar Hubmaier (q.v.) came to Waldshut from Regensburg as Catholic pastor in the spring of 1521, where he gradually became a Lutheran (from 1522). Early in 1525 he began to question infant baptism. On Feb. 2, 1525, Hubmaier published his Oeffentliche Erbietung, offering to prove in a public debate that infant baptism had no foundation in Scripture, but the request for a disputation was not granted. When Wilhelm Reublin (q.v.) appeared in Waldshut from Zürich, he found a ready response in Hubmaier who was baptized on Easter (April 16) with 60 others by Reublin. Hubmaier in turn baptized over 300 others in the days immediately following Easter, using a milk bucket filled with water from the fountain in the town square. He also served the new congregation with the Lord's Supper and washed their feet. Apparently a substantial part of the town's population became Anabaptist.

Strangely nothing further is known about the Waldshut Anabaptists, although the congregation must have continued until the final capture of the city by the forces of the Austrian government, which occurred on Dec. 5, 1525. Hubmaier himself fled, telling the city council at its "surrender" meeting on December 5 that since Catholic worship would be restored by the conquerors he could not stay. (See Hubmaier, Balthasar, which does not report on the congregation.) H.S.B.

Ernst Crous, "Auf Spuren der Täufer am Oberrhein," Der Mennonit X (1957) 42 f.

Walraven, Jaques, a Mennonite minister in Amsterdam 1588-1617, concerning whom little is known. H.S.B.

Wappler, Paul (1868-1915), professor at the Realgymnasium in Zwickau, Saxony, Germany, was born Sept. 18, 1868, at Auerbach (Vogtland), died Jan. 3, 1915, in Zwickau. He was the author of the following books significant for Anabaptist study: Die Stellung Kursachsens und des Landgrafen Philipp von Hessen zur Täuferbewegung (Münster, 1910, 254 pp.); Die Täuferbewegung in Thüringen von 1526 bis 1584 (Jena, 1913, 541 pp.); also Thomas Münzer in Zwickau und die "Zwickauer Propheten" (Zwickau, 1908); Inquisition und Ketzerprozesse in Zwickau zur Reformationszeit dargestellt im Zusammenhang mit der Entwicklung der Ansichten Luthers und Melancthons über Glaubens- und Gewissensfreiheit (Leipzig, 1908).

The two volumes on the Anabaptists are thorough and objective, notable also for their extensive publication of sources. The first has 110 pages of sources, largely from the Gesamtarchiv at Weimar; the second has 295 pages containing apparently all the pertinent documents for the study of Anabaptism in Thuringia. H.S.B.

Wasco (Cal.) Mennonite Brethren Church was organized in October 1958, and built its meeting-house at 2225 South 7th Street in 1959; its membership was about 125, with Werner Kroeker as pastor. H.S.B.

Washington Center Mennonite Church (Central Conference), now extinct, located near Ashley, Mich., some 25 miles north of Lansing, was organized in 1924 by a number of families which had moved into the area from Pekin, Ill., in the early 1920's, together with three families from the Ashley M.C. congregation. The group bought a church in 1924. It never had a minister and never reached more than 27 in membership. In 1933 the group dissolved, some members returning to the M.C. congregation. H.S.B.

Watauga County, in the extreme northwestern corner of North Carolina, is the seat of a series of K.M.B. congregations around the city of Boone, resulting from mission work among the Negroes of this area begun in 1899 at Elk Park by H. V. Wiebe (1899-1907), assisted by J. M. Tschetter (1902-12). P. H. Siemens, who came in 1925, spent over 25 years in the work here. Among the addresses of the ministers of the Negro churches are Darby, Boone, Lenoir, and Laytown. The leading minister is Rondo Horton of Boone. The congregations do not appear in the K.M.B. Yearbook, which reports a total membership of 180 for 1958. H.S.B.

Wätzenobis (Slovak, Vacanovice), a village in Moravia, lying between Gaya and Bisentz, on land of the Zerotin family, where a Hutterite Bruderhof was located from at least as early as 1571 (first mentioned in the Chronik) to 1622. The Bruderhof was plundered and burned down in 1605 by marauding troops who killed four brethren; later in the same year the manager was killed. At this time Wätzenobis was a part of the possessions of General Wallenstein (q.v.), who in 1615 put the manager in prison. On Sept. 21, 1619, the Bruderhof was plundered by Dampierre's troops, Feb. 7, 1620, by Polish troops, and in 1621, after being rebuilt, plundered again by imperial troops. (Zieglschmid, Chronik.) H.S.B.

Weddings, United States and Canada. Very little can be found in church records concerning American Mennonite wedding practices before the 20th century. An account in Pennsylvania Dutch and Other Essays, written by Phebe Earle Gibbons in 1882, describes a Reformed Mennonite wedding in the meetinghouse on a December Sunday morning. The preacher spoke about divorce, the duties of husbands and wives, adultery, and Paul's references to marriage. Having ended his sermon, he called upon the pair desiring to be married to come forward. The man rose from the men's side of the church and the woman from the opposite side. They joined in the center aisle and walked forward to the preacher who asked three questions of them. After the questions had been answered, the preacher directed them to join hands, pronounced them husband and wife, and invoked a blessing upon them. This was followed by a short prayer, after which the wedded pair took their separate seats among the congregation. The audience then knelt in prayer and the service was closed with a hymn. Afterwards a few friends gathered at the bride's home.

Amish weddings follow a pattern today similar to those of the previous century. The "go-between" (Stecklimann), who is the deacon, asks the woman's hand from her parents in behalf of the suitor whom he represents, as well as obtaining the consent of the young woman. This is a mere formality, as the couple had previously made their own arrangements. At least two weeks preceding the wedding, the intention of the couple to marry is announced in a Sunday morning worship service. The bride-to-be is customarily absent from this service, but the groom-to-be is expected to attend, although he was privileged to leave before the announcement was made. Autumn is the usual season for Amish weddings, Tuesday or Thursday practically always being chosen and the month of November being preferred. Statistics show that in the late 19th century December had been the preferred month. The marriage ceremony generally takes place in a neighbor's house as the bride's home has been made ready for the wedding meal. In Lancaster County, Pa., the marriage ceremony and the wedding meal are in the same house. At the proper moment in the service the couple and their attendants appear before the ministers. Following a sermon the bishop asks them the usual questions and then unites them in marriage as he places their clasped hands between his. Following the closing song the bride and groom with their attendants leave for her home, soon to be followed by the wedding guests. Following the sumptuous wedding meal, the afternoon is spent in visiting and singing hymns. Later the young people play games, and after the evening meal, the guests sing hymns until the hour of departure. Wedding days are joyous occasions in the Amish social calendar and the feasting and hilarity often have tended to become objects of criticism by the church leaders. An old Amish church discipline names as undesirable "the imposing weddings with immoderate preparations." Bishop Jacob Swartzendruber (q.v.) in Civil War days had warned the brotherhood of the inconsistency of feasting when their neighbors were sad because of their losses in the war and many people were without necessary food.

During the previous century Mennonite (MC) weddings had some similarities to Amish weddings, generally taking place in the homes. Marriage notices in the Herald of Truth during 1870-1900 indicate that weddings were nearly always held in the bride's home or in the home of the officiating minister. In frontier communities where there were no Mennonite clergy to perform marriage ceremonies, civil instead of church weddings were sometimes used. During the period when in certain Mennonite communities it was customary not to receive baptism and become members of the church until after marriage the practice of having a civil ceremony was sometimes resorted to since Mennonite bishops were not permitted to marry couples unless both parties were communicant members of the Mennonite church. According to historian Ira D. Landis, from 1729 and into the 1880's Lancaster conference young people were nearly always married by Lutheran and Reformed preachers. In the late 1880's Lancaster Mennonite ministers, both preachers and bishops, again performed marriage ceremonies, but by a decade later this function was reserved exclusively for the bishops. Before church weddings were sanctioned in the Lancaster conference the marriage ceremony was nearly always performed in the bride's home.

Because of the paucity of the records no thorough study has been made on the change from marriages performed in the homes to church weddings. A Virginia Mennonite Conference resolution of 1900 stated that church weddings were not permitted. By 1914, however, the regulation was changed to read that weddings would be permitted in churches only at the time of regular services. Since 1920 in the Mennonite Church (MC) there has been a gradual growth in church weddings held during the week in special services. The Gospel Herald reported 421 weddings in the period of January-August 1957. Of these, 329, or 78 per cent, were church weddings. The wedding veil is now used in a few areas of the church as well as the practice of the father giving the bride away in the ceremony. The wedding ring ceremony is not used in the Mennonite (MC) and the more conservative churches. In church weddings traditional wedding music is seldom used but instead appropriate hymns are presented by choral groups. The married couple kneeling for the final prayer, the bride and groom kissing each other immediately after the ceremony, church receptions after the ceremony, lengthy descriptions of the wedding in the local papers, are new practices in Mennonite (MC) circles reflecting the gradual adoption of common Protestant traditions.

Changes such as the above occurred earlier in some General Conference Mennonite and Mennonite Brethren circles where the usual Protestant forms, including the use of the single and double ring ceremony, are being followed. On the other hand, practices within the General Conference churches vary considerably. Rural church weddings among those of Russian background tend to be simpler than among those of a Pennsylvania-German background, including certain sections of the Mennonite Church (MC). In some of their churches it is customary to invite the entire congregation to the wedding, while only those receiving special invitations go to the reception following the ceremony. In South Dakota it is customary to have full wedding dinners for all of the invited guests, who may number several hundred. It is also customary to have a program of music at these wedding feasts. In these church weddings among the Mennonites of Russian background it is customary to have a sermon with the couple seated, either before or after the marriage ceremony. Sometimes a second sermon is given by another minister at the reception. In some of their churches, the use of wedding rings in the ceremony and the public exchange of kisses by the couple are still disapproved. It is therefore difficult to generalize on wedding practices within the General Conference churches.

In all of the branches there was a tendency for weddings to become more elaborate and costly during the mid-twentieth century, reflecting perhaps America's unprecedented material prosperity. Mennonites, however, were deploring these trends and leaders of the various groups were calling for simplicity and for a renewed emphasis upon the distinctively Christian aspects of the wedding occasion.

A practice common only among Mennonites of the Russian-Prussian background is the holding of religious services in the church at the time of the twenty-fifth and fiftieth wedding anniversary. The observance of "open house" at the home of the couple on these two anniversaries is becoming common in many Mennonite communities. The Herald of Truth, Gospel Witness, Gospel Herald, and Herald der Wahrheit have printed short notices of marriages from their beginning issues. The Mennonite has recently discontinued the practice. The Christian Witness, Der Bote, and Die Mennonitische Rundschau do not carry marriage news. The Mennonite Weekly Review and The Canadian Mennonite present more detailed wedding announcements than do other Mennonite papers, thus presenting materials for the study of recent Mennonite wedding practices.

Since the religious ceremony is considered a legal marriage in the United States and Canada, no civil ceremony being necessary, in many states clergymen must have a license to officiate. In all cases the couple wishing to marry must secure a license to do so. In earlier days in many areas before the license was introduced the publishing of the bans in church (usually twice) was required. M.G.

Russia. Among the Mennonites of Russia weddings contained elements which were transplanted from Prussia. Whether an Umbitter (q.v.), as used by the Mennonites of Prussia and their descendants in Nebraska and Kansas to the end of the 19th century, was also used in Russia is not established. The fact that Johann Cornies broke the Hutterite tradition of having parents decide on spouses for their children seems to indicate that traditions along these lines relaxed among the Mennonites of Prussia, possibly before their migrating to Russia. During the beginning of the 20th century a proposal of marriage had become an elaborate occasion. Horses and buggy had to be in prime condition. The suitor possibly even had a coachman take him to the home of the girl of his choice. He would be ushered into the parlor (grosse Stube), visit with the parents, and ask the father whether they would give him their daughter as wife. The Polish artist Chodowiecky, in a series of "Marriage Proposals," features a Mennonite proposal in the presence of the mother. To what extent this was characteristic or perpetuated is not known.

Immediately after the engagement the relatives were invited to the wedding, usually by circulating from neighbor to neighbor a letter containing the invitation and the list of those invited. The wedding took place two or three weeks after the official engagement, usually in the home of the bride; it was possibly held in the barn, which was especially prepared for this occasion. Weddings were rarely solemnized in the churches, probably because guests were entertained with regular meals, and the churches were not equipped for this purpose.

The preparation for the wedding was a significant task. The "hope chest" was a large trunk (still found in museums and some homes of America), into which the bride placed her gradually accumulating household linens and other items. The house and yard had to be spotless. Since the number of invited guests was always large, much baking and cooking had to be done. Immigrants from Russia after World War I brought some of these practices with them. These, like other traditions, are still largely preserved among the Old Colony Mennonites and related groups in Manitoba, Mexico, and Menno, Paraguay. (Arnold Dyck, Dee Fria, Steinbach, 1947; Kay Woelk, "Courtship and Marriage of the Russian Mennonites," term paper in BeCL.)

C.K.

Netherlands. At present weddings of Mennonites in Holland do not differ from weddings among non-Mennonites. Until 1795 Mennonite marriages were performed either by the magistrate officials or by the ministers of the congregations, in the latter case with a report to the officials (see Marriage, ME III, 508). After 1795 marriages were to be performed by the magistrates; if the newly wedded couple wishes it so, the marriage is solemnized afterward (ingezegend, gewijd) in a church meeting. From 1795 until about 1925 such consecration or religious blessing of marriages was rather seldom; at present newly married couples more and more after the performing of the marriage at the town hall come to the church for a religious consecration. The trip to the town hall is customarily made in a hired horse-drawn open coach.

voZ.

Weickmann, Bernhard, an Anabaptist of Bruchsal, Baden, who with Julius Lober (q.v.) and Ulrich Hutscher was examined on April 16, 1531, and recanted. (TA Bayern I, 217-19.)

H.S.B.

Welschländer Mennonite Church (Mennonite Church of French-speaking Lorraine), probably called Welsch (French) because this German-speaking group lived in a French environment, existed probably from the early 18th century to c1880. The Dieuze (q.v.) congregation was formed out of the families living in the central area of the Welschländer congregation's widely scattered territory, which once extended from near Metz to below Sarrebourg in the southeast. The first Mennonite settlers in the Duchy of Lorraine (q.v.) (joined to France in 1766) came as the result of the expulsion order of 1712 issued by the Intendant of Alsace when all "Anabaptists" were ordered to leave. Since Lorraine was then in a sense in the German Empire the Mennonites enjoyed relative toleration here. As early as 1764 the fiscal agent of the Bishop of Metz ordered the cessation of persecution of the Swiss Anabaptists in the bishopric. The Welschländer congregation was represented in the petition of 1808 of the French and Palatine congregations to Napoleon for relief from military service, Christ Engel and Christen Gerber being the signers for the congregation.

On Dec. 25, 1808, the ministers of the congregation wrote to the other congregations calling a meeting at Sarreck near Sarrebourg for Jan. 7, 1809; those signing were Christian Engel, Hannes Hirschi, Joerg Sprunger, Christian Lehman, and Christian Nafziger. Christian Engel was one of the two Mennonite delegates sent to Paris by this meeting to submit a petition to the government. Other names found in the documents relating to this congregation are Joseph Wuerkler, Hans Gingrich, and Christ Roth.

As the families moved gradually further west and south, meeting families moving in from other areas, e.g., Salm, new congregations were formed. Numerous families emigrated to America. H.S.B.

Pierre Sommer, "Assemblée de la Lorraine Française (Welschländer Gemeinde)," Christ Seul, April 1931, 5 f.

West Abbotsford and Clearbrook Mennonite Church Funeral Aid, Abbotsford, B.C., was established in 1952. It has 263 members and pays $150 to bereaved families for the burial of an adult and $100 for children under 12.

M.G.

Western District Loan Library functions under the supervision of the Western District Education Committee of the General Conference Mennonite Church. It was begun in 1936 largely through the efforts of Abram Warkentin (q.v.), then on the staff of Bethel College. Through gifts and purchase the library was developed until in 1959 it had 3,400 volumes for loan. Since the beginning it has been housed by Bethel College, North Newton, Kans., and is now located in the library.

J.F.S.

Wiens, Johann G. (1874-1951), Mennonite Brethren missionary and Bible school teacher, was born Aug. 3, 1874, at Steintal, Molotschna, Russia. He received his elementary and secondary education in his home community and attended the Baptist Seminary at Hamburg, Germany, 1899-1903. He married Helene Hildebrand Nov. 12, 1896. They served a term as missionaries in India 1904-10. In 1918-24 he was leader and teacher of the Tchongrav Bible School (q.v.) in the Crimea. He migrated to Canada in 1926 where he taught in the Winkler Bible School (q.v.). He died in 1951.

C.K.

Friesen, Brüderschaft, 567; Abr. Unruh, Die mennonitische Bibelschule zu Tschongraw, Krim, in Russland (n.p., n.d.); A. Warkentin, Who's Who Among the Mennonites (North Newton, Kans., 1943).

Wigs (Periwigs). When, at the close of the 17th century, it became fashionable in the Netherlands for people of high rank to wear powdered periwigs, some Mennonites began to wear them. Thus difficulties arose in a few congregations, some members considering this fashion too worldly for the plain people of Menno. Claes Jacobsz, the preacher of Den Burg on the island of Texel (q.v.), was asked in 1715 to take off his wig; when he refused to do so, he was dismissed. Nevertheless the wearing of wigs was soon tolerated, particularly in larger towns like Amsterdam and Haarlem, and highly esteemed elders like Herman Schijn (q.v.) and Pieter Schrijver (q.v.) in the early 18th century used to wear periwigs. In the Groningen Old Flemish congregations there was much more opposition. In the Deventer congregation of this branch two brethren were earnestly requested in 1753 to abandon their wigs, at least during the communion service. The very strict "Fijne" (q.v.) Mennonites expressly forbade the wearing of "foreign hair" as late as the end of the 18th century. The Lithuanian Mennonites who settled in the Netherlands in 1733 were scandalized to see the delegates of the Dutch Mennonite Committee for Foreign Needs wearing wigs. Also in the Danzig congregation there was a long period of trouble when Mennonites from Holland began to visit the church in 1727 wearing wigs. (See Periwig Dispute.) (Inv. Arch. Amst. I, No. 2041; II, Nos. 1619-21, 2632 ff.; DB 1919, 85 f.)

vdZ.

Wilhelm V, called the Pious, who reigned as Duke of Bavaria 1579-97, a vigorous opponent of the Reformation, and under strong Jesuit influence a bitter persecutor of heretics and also of witches. On Feb. 27, 1587, he issued a mandate ordering the arrest of Wastl Anfang (q.v.) and Hans Zuckenhammer (q.v.), offering 100 guilders for their capture, but in vain. H.S.B.

Willem (de Snijder) Vernon, an Anabaptist martyr of Hondschote, Belgium, was arrested on May 4, 1570, during a meeting of a congregation held at Tillegem near Brugge, Belgium, with four other brethren, two of whom recanted, but the remaining three were soon burned at the stake. Willem's wife at first escaped but later was caught and executed. The Martyrs' Mirror erroneously gives 1568 as the year of these martyrdoms. (Mart. Mir. D 369, E 725 f.; Verheyden, Brugge, 62, No. 68.) H.S.B.

Willms, Johann, milling industrialist, Halbstadt, Molotschna, Russia, was a significant leader in economical and cultural life of the Mennonites before and after the Russian Revolution of 1917. He was the chairman of the Bureau der Molotschnaer Mennonitischen Vereinigung (q.v.) and cochairman of the Allgemeiner Mennonitischer Kongress (q.v.) of 1917. C.K.

Friesen, Brüderschaft, p. 694 ff.; "Protokoll des Allgemeinen Mennonitischen Kongresses in Ohrloff, 1917."

Wilmington First Mennonite Church (CAM), Wilmington, Del., had its beginnings in the Wilmington Mission (1948-58) but was organized as a separate congregation in 1958, with a membership of 22. It was associated with the Central Conservative Mennonite Church near Dover and the Laws Conservative Mennonite Church near Harrington, the combined membership of the three in 1959 being 298. Amos Bontrager was the pastor. M.G.

Witzel, George (1501-73), Lutheran clergyman, formerly pastor in Wenigenlupnitz near Eisenach, Thuringia, and also 1525-31 in Memegk near Bitterfeld, a friend of the Anabaptist leader Melchior Rinck

(q.v.), at the time of the latter's imprisonment in Vacha living in the same town, in early 1532 wrote a letter to Rinck seeking to persuade him to renounce Anabaptism and return to the church. A letter of Dec. 24, 1531, by Witzel to M.B.F. reports the alarming growth of Anabaptism in western Thuringia. (To be found in Wicelii Epistolarum libri quatuor, Leipzig, 1537.) Witzel was mild in his attitude toward the Anabaptists. In 1533 he returned to the Roman Catholic Church. H.S.B.

Winebrennerians: see Churches of God.

Winschoten, a town in the Dutch province of Groningen. From 1872 regular Mennonite services were held here every three weeks in the Lutheran church. In 1885 a Mennonite Kring (q.v.) was organized here as a subdivision of the Midwolda (q.v.), Beerta, and de Meeden congregation. In 1893 J. A. Wartena, the pastor of this congregation, moved to Winschoten, which gradually became its center, and since 1900 the old Midwolda congregation is called Winschoten. The pastors after Wartena, who served 1893-1901, were F. Dijkema 1901-5, J. H. van Giesen Jr 1906-21, then after nine years of vacancy Corn. Vis Jzn 1930-38, A. du Croix 1939-44, R. J. Faber 1946-51, and J. H. Rawie 1953-. In 1931 a meetinghouse was built in Winschoten. The membership numbered 120 in 1900 and 97 in 1958. Church activities are ladies' circle, youth group (15-18), and Sunday school for children. (DB 1872, 192; 1887, 148; De Zondagsbode XXIII, 1909-10, No. 24.)

vdZ.

Wintersdorf: see Przechovka.

Wismar, seaport and manufacturing city, Mecklenburg, Germany, was the scene of some Anabaptist activity and conferences. On April 11, 1535, at a conference of evangelical theologians at which action against Anabaptists was taken, Wismar was represented. This does not prove that there were Anabaptists in this city at this early date. When Menno Simons lived at Wismar during the winter of 1553-54 there was a considerable group of Anabaptists there. On Dec. 21, 1553, the refugee congregation led by the Reformed preacher a Lasco arrived there from London. Menno and Martin Micron (q.v.), the latter representing this refugee congregation, held a debate in Wismar on basic Christian doctrines. On Feb. 6, 1554, another discussion, particularly on the incarnation of Christ, took place, which was continued on February 15. Menno and Micron continued their discussion in several published writings.

Three days after the meeting, Menno was informed by the city council that Anabaptists were not to be tolerated in the city because the discussions had become known. Menno accused Micron of reporting the Anabaptists to the city council. Particularly the Lutheran ministers of Wismar, Smedenstede and Vincentius, aroused the city council against the Anabaptists which decreed that the latter had to leave the city by Nov. 11, 1554. It was probably at this time that Menno left Wismar to find a new shelter at Wüstenfelde (q.v.).

A significant meeting of Anabaptist elders in Wis-mar in 1554 resulted in the Wismar Resolutions (q.v.), which played a very significant role in the later development of Anabaptism in the Netherlands and northwest Germany. It is likely that Gillis van Aken (q.v.) was received into the fellowship here after having been excommunicated. (Cornelius Krahn, Menno Simons, Karlsruhe, 1936, 78-84.) C.K.

Witmarsum (New) Colony, a Mennonite colony established in 1951 in the state of Parana, Brazil, some 45 miles northwest of Curitiba, by the remainder of the former Krauel (q.v.) colony in Santa Catharina, when about half of that group moved to Bagé in Rio Grande do Sul. A tract of ca. 20,000 acres was purchased from Senator Robert Glasser by a co-operative composed of the heads of the settler families. By September, 1951, 70 families had purchased farms of 125-250 acres each, but in 1953 only 52 families with a total population of 319 were living there. The occupation is dairy farming and cattle raising. In 1958 three churches had been established in the colony, the Mennonite Church, the Mennonite Brethren Church, and the Free Evangelical Mennonite Church. (J. W. Fretz, Pilgrims in Paraguay, Scottsdale, 1953, 179-82.) H.S.B.

Witmarsum Free Evangelical Mennonite Church, Witmarsum Colony, Parana, Brazil, had 50 members in 1958, with Robert Janzen as minister.

Witmarsum Mennonite Church, Witmarsum Colony, Parana, Brazil, founded c1951, in 1958 had 102 members, with David Nikkel as elder, and Johann Boldt and Peter Klassen as preachers.

Witmarsum Mennonite Brethren Church, Witmarsum Colony, Parana, Brazil, had 32 members in 1958, with Abram Dueck as minister.

Wohldemfürst, a village of the Kuban Mennonite settlement (q.v.), Russia, was established in 1862 and later became known as Velikoknyazheskoye. Another village near by was Alexandrodar, formerly Alexanderfeld. (See Kuban.) C.K.

Wohldemfürst-Alexandrodar Mennonite Church, Kuban Mennonite settlement (q.v.), Russia, was established in 1885. At first the worship services were conducted in private homes. In the 1890's a church was erected in Alexandrodar. In 1905 the membership was 124 with a total population of 270. Cornelius Dirks was the first elder and was succeeded by Franz F. Enns (q.v.). Jakob Hübert, David Dirks, Johann J. Wiebe, C. C. Peters, and Jakob Braun served as ministers. The church was dissolved under the Soviet regime. C.K.

Die Kubaner Ansiedlung (Steinbach, 1953) 37; H. Dirks, Statistik, 36, 64.

Worcester Reformed Mennonite Church, near Norristown, Pa., erected its meetinghouse in 1890, although members had been living in the area as early as 1864. In 1958 its membership was 15. H.S.B.

Wouter (Gaultier van der Weyden), an Anabaptist martyr, was burned at the stake at Gent, Belgium, on April 11, 1551. Wouter, who was a native of Lier in the Belgian province of Brabant, had fled with some others to Gent, but they were soon arrested and imprisoned in the Gravensteen castle. Some of this group apostatized, but four of them suffered martyrdom. For particulars, see Goris Cooman.

vdZ.

Wünsch, Georg (1887-), professor of ethics and apologetics at the University of Marburg 1927- (1922-27 instructor in Systematic Theology), a theological leader of the Religious Socialists in Germany, a disciple of Ernst Troeltsch. In two of his books he treats Anabaptism briefly. In Evangelische Ethik des Politischen (Tübingen, 1936), pp. 202-46, he has a chapter "Anabaptism, Related Groups, and Successors," which treats Müntzer, Hofmann, the Anabaptist congregations (includes Mennonites and Hutterites), English Revolution parties (Independents, Quakers, and Levellers), and Moravians. Evangelische Wirtschaftsethik (Tübingen, 1927) also treats the Anabaptists. H.S.B.

Wymysle: see Deutsch-Wymysle.

Yoder (Rock Creek) Amish Mennonite Church, the mother church of the Central (Illinois) Conference, was organized by the members of the Mackinaw (q.v.) congregation living in McLean County. It was called the Yoder church because of its long-time leader, Bishop Jonathan Yoder (1795-1869), who had moved into the community from Juniata County, Pa., in the spring of 1851. In 1853 a meetinghouse was erected at Rock Creek, 4 miles north of Danvers, the first Amish meetinghouse west of Malvern, Pa. The congregation grew rapidly from some 100 to 400 members by 1872. In that year a new meetinghouse was erected two miles south of the old location, later called the North Danvers church. Joseph Stuckey (q.v.), the later leader in the founding of the Central Conference, was ordained minister here in 1860 and bishop in 1864, and became the leader of the congregation. In 1871 or 1872 the congregation was renamed North Danvers (q.v.). H.S.B.

Yoder, Jonathan (1795-1869), an outstanding early Amish Mennonite leader in central Illinois, was born in Berks County, Pa., Sept. 2, 1795, the son of Jacob Yoder and Jacobina Esh. He was a carpenter and farmer but also a teacher in the subscription schools of the day. He lived in a number of places in Pennsylvania (Berks, Mifflin, and Juniata counties) and moved to McLean County, Ill., in the spring of 1851. He had been ordained preacher (1825) and bishop in Pennsylvania, and soon became the leader of the Amish Mennonites living in Danvers and Dry Grove townships in McLean County. The congregation he organized here in 1851 became known as the Yoder church, and later as North Danvers was the mother church of the Central (Illinois) Conference (q.v.). His successor as bishop here was Joseph Stuckey (q.v.). Yoder was also active in the Amish Mennonite General Conference which met annually 1862-78, and served as moderator of the first conference in 1862. He married Magdalena Wagner in 1816; they had 11 children. He died

Jan. 28, 1869, and is buried in the Lantz cemetery southeast of Carlock. H.S.B.

H. F. Weber, Centennial History of the Mennonites of Illinois 1829-1929 (Goshen, 1931).

Youth Work. Organized work for and among the youth of the church is a relatively modern development among Mennonites. In Europe the South German Mennonite Conference established its Youth Commission (Jugendkommission) in 1919, and its youth journal Mennonitische Jugendwarte (q.v.) in 1920. In Holland, although some youth circles (Jongerenkring) were organized a few years earlier, the Doopsgezinde Jongerenbond (q.v.) was not organized nationally until 1926, preceded by the Provincial Friese D.J.B. in 1924. The Doopsgezinde Jeugdraad (q.v., Mennonite Youth Council) was established by the A.D.S. in 1946 for the purpose of co-ordinating all Dutch Mennonite youth activities. The Swiss Mennonite Conference established its Youth Commission in 1935.

In the United States young people's meetings, usually held on Sunday evenings in connection with the preaching service, were begun in the Mennonite Church (MC) c1890 and spread rapidly after 1900. At about the same time in the General Conference Mennonite Church, young people's societies were being organized, usually as Christian Endeavor (q.v.) groups, the first in 1886. Organized youth work directed on a national scale came later in both groups. The M.C. national Mennonite Youth Fellowship was organized in 1948, although the Young People's Problems Committee (q.v.), set up by the Mennonite General Conference in 1924, had since 1920 promoted earlier forms of youth work such as Young People's Institutes. The G.C.M. Young People's Union (q.v.) was set up as a conference-wide youth organization in 1941, a Sunday School and Youth Committee having been set up in 1920. The Youth Committee (q.v.) of the M.B. General Conference was set up in 1936.

A significant development in youth work, largely since World War II in North America, has been youth camps (q.v.) and retreats, much of the camp work being directed toward youth of high-school age and younger. (See also Christian Education and Young People's Bible Meeting.) H.S.B.

Zeeuwse Ring, founded c1880, an association of the Zeeland congregations of Aardenburg, Vlissingen, Middelburg, and Goes for mutual aid in cases of vacancy of the pulpit in one of these four congregations. This Ring lasted for only a few years, about 1885 the Zeeland churches entering into the Zuid-hollandsche (q.v.) Ring. vDZ.

Zemstvos: see Sanitätsdienst.

Zentralbureau was the executive body and office of the Bureau der Molotschnaer Mennonitischen Vereinigung (q.v.). It was referred to as Mennozentrum (q.v.). C.K.

Zernike, Anna, b. 1887 at Amsterdam, studied theology at the university and the Mennonite seminary at Amsterdam and became the first woman minister in the Dutch Mennonite church. She served 1911-15 at Bovenkniipe (q.v.) in Friesland. In 1915 she was married to the painter Jan Mankes and retired, but after the death of her husband (1920) she again went into the ministry, serving 1921-48 in the Protestantenbond (Dutch union of liberal Protestants) at Rotterdam. In 1921 she obtained her Th.D. degree. She wrote many articles for Dutch periodicals and a few books on art and religion. vDZ.

Zierikzeeërs: see Stilstaanders.

Ziffersystem (1028a): The following Mennonite musical publications have been printed with numerical notation: H. Franz, Choralbuch (four-part edition, Leipzig, 1860 and 1880) (one-part edition Leipzig, 1865); reprint of the 1865 edition, at Elkhart (1878 and 1918) at Steinbach, Man. (1902, printed at Elkhart), at Altona, Man. (n.d., and 1946); Choralbuch in vierstimmigem Tonsatz zum Gebrauch in Kirche, Schule und Haus der Mennoniten-Gemeinden, Zusammengestellt im Auftrage der Predigerkonferenz (n.p., Winnipeg, Man., 1935); Joh. Enss, Schulchoralbuch (1886); Choralbuch (n.p., 1914); J. H. Janzen, Choralbuch (1930 in Canada); A. Sawatzky, Gesangschule in Noten und Ziffernoten (n.d., n.p.); G. J. Peters, title unknown (n.p., n.d.); in monthly periodical form, Isaak Born, Sängerfreund (1889-90, 18 months) and Is. Born, H. Braun, K. Neufeld, and J. Janzen, Liederperlen 1891-1914; songbooks as follows: Liedersammlung (von einigen Lehrern 1896); W. N. Russkije pessni (1896); W. N. and J. R., Festgesänge (Part II, 1897); J. and H. Braun, Kinderharfe (1902); I. S. Prochanow, Gussli (1811); J. Froese, Sangesblüten (1914); J. Janzen, Liederalbum (Part I, 1914). A mimeographed edition of selections from the four-part edition of 1860 (1680) was published about 1943 in Chortitz, Man.

J.P.KI., H.S.B.

Zim(m)eraw(u)er (Simmerauer), Hans, an Anabaptist martyr who was beheaded in 1540 at Schwatz in the Inn Valley in Tirol. He was the author of several hymns (according to the Chronik); Wolkan identifies the hymn "In Gotten Namen hebn wir an" (Ausbund, No. 121) as one of his. (Mart. Mir. D 51, E 455; Zieglschmid, Chronik, 223; Wolkan, Lieder, 40). NEFF.

Zion Mennonite Church (GCM), now extinct, located in Manns Choice, Bedford Co., Pa., was begun in 1915 in an abandoned church by Herman Snyder, who served this group together with Napier, 4 miles away, until his death in 1917. The highest membership was 49 in 1926. In 1935 the Eastern District Mission Committee, which had supported the work, closed the church. H.S.B.

Zion Mennonite Church (GCM), Lucien, Okla., now extinct, was organized Sept. 25, 1898, with some 10 charter members and John Lichte as minister. It erected a meetinghouse one mile south of Lucien. The highest membership was 17 in 1911. In 1912 it disbanded. H.S.B.

Zion Mennonite Church (MC), Birdsboro, Pa., a member of the Ohio and Eastern Conference, was organized April 24, 1951, with 42 charter members coming largely from the Conestoga congregation with T. K. Hershey as bishop-pastor. The work was started in 1916 as an outpost of Conestoga. Meetings were held in the former Friedens Baptist Church until July 1951, when the former Zion Methodist Church was occupied, which is located 7 miles south of Reading and 8 miles north of Morgantown. Ford Berg served as pastor 1954-57, followed by Jesse Yoder 1957-59 (ord. 1951). In 1958 the membership was 90.

H.S.B.

Zougg (Zaugg, Zowg): see Zook.

Zwanzig neue geistliche Lieder, Das Erste: von einem Drucker Gesellen Thomas von Imbroich genannt, aufs neue Gedruckt Anno 1758, a Swiss-South German Mennonite hymnal, containing 19 hymns. It contains a supplement printed in 1699, with three long hymns. (See Hymnology.) (Wolkan, Lieder, 157-60.)

vdZ.

Zweibrücken, Duchy of: see Pfalz-Zweibrücken.

Zwolsche Kas: see Zwols(ch)e Vere(e)niging.

* * *

Goethe, Wolfgang (1749-1832), and the Mennonites. Known references by Goethe to the Mennonites and contacts with them follow. In 1768, while recovering from a serious illness, Goethe wrote a versified letter to Friederike Oeser, describing himself in a series of similes, including the lines

Bald still, wie ein Hypochondrist,
Und sittig, wie ein Mennonist,
Und folgsam, wie ein gutes Lamm.

On his journey up the Rhine in 1774 with Basedow and Lavater the three stopped at two Mennonite homes at Neuwied in the Palatinate, namely, the minister, Lorenz Friedenreich, and the noted clock-maker, Peter Kinzing. Lavater's diary makes interesting comment on the personality of the Mennonites. Goethe had some contact with Mennonites during his service as Minister of Economics in the government of Duke Karl August of Saxe-Weimar, when the latter attempted to establish Mennonite farmers on his land to improve agriculture.

The matter of Goethe and the Mennonites needs further inquiry. For further information on the contacts mentioned, see the items below. E.H.B.

Adolf Bach, ed., Goethes Rheinreise mit Lavater und Basedow im Sommer 1774 (Zürich, 1923) 119; Ernst Correll, Das Schweizerische Täufermennonitentum (Tübingen, 1925) 130 f.; Ernst Crous, "Lavater, Basedow und Goethe bei den Mennoniten in Neuwied," Menn. Bl., 1930, 107.

Saxe-Weimar, a middle German duchy with Weimar as capital (incorporated into Thuringia in 1920), is of interest to Mennonites because of a short-lived settlement of four families c1780 resulting from attempts of Duke Karl August to improve the agriculture of his land by bringing in skilled Mennonite farmers. The four families, probably from Hesse-Darmstadt, were settled as renters on state lands at Wasungen (Kameralgut Zillebach). Goethe, then in the ducal service, commented in a letter on the keen business ability of the Mennonites.

H.S.B.

Ernst Correll, Das Schweizerische Täufermennonitentum (Tübingen, 1925) 130 f.

Corrections and Additions

Volume I

xiiiib, 31: for Rosemary, Man. read Rosemary, Alta.
 xiiiib, 53: eliminate entire line R. Foth xiiiib, 54: for J.F. read Jacob H. Franz and J.F. xiva, 65: for L.H. read L.Hoo.
 xivb, 44: eliminate entire line Köhler, Walther xivb, 55, 56: eliminate entire lines Kroeker, Jacob and *Kroeker, Jakob xivb, 60, 62: correction of duplicate sets of initials: find Kuhn on p. 442, find Kuyf on pp. 511, 552.

Correction of remaining duplicate sets of initials: Braun, J. P. (165) and Bueckert, J. P. (373); Foth, Johannes (179) and Franz, Jacob H. (591); Hein, Gerhard (521, 551, 665) and Hoffman, George (312); Lark, James (311) and Lohrenz, J. H. (214, 506, 542); Mast, J. B. (748) and Miller, Jonas B. (92); Neufeld, Henry (161) and Nussbaumer, Hans (80); Ramseyer, L. L. (370, 636) and Rassi, L. L. (495); Shank, J. W. (156) and Shank, J. Ward (433); Stoll, Henry J. (479) and Stuckey, Harley Jr. (9); Wall, John (630); Weber, Aaron M. (55, 399) and Wiebe, Abe M. (312); Westra, H. (401, 450) and Wiebe, Herman (313).

xvia, 44: eliminate entire line Wagler, Joel

1a, 24: for July read Aug.

3b, 32: for Liukinga read Luikinga

4a, 35: for Broese . . . vacant.) read Broese van Gronau 1852-83, J. G. Frerichs 1921-27, F. van der Wissel 1927-32, Abr. Mulder 1932-41, M. J. Nottenius 1941-51, and S. A. Vis 1952- .

11a, 53: for Beck read Weckh

14a, 44: Note: This article confuses two men named Adriaen. One of them, Adriaen Adriaensz, also called Adriaen den Sant, of Hazerswoude, died when the Eewouts house was taken. The other, Adriaen Jorysz van Benschop, was active in Münster and Groningen and probably lost his life in the attack on the Amsterdam city hall on May 10-11, 1535. (Mellink, Wederdopers.)

14b, 41: for in the same year read on July 10, 1565

15b, 35: for Gend read Gent

23a, 56: for Johann read Stephan

29b, 25: for founded read founded in 1837

36a, 33: for Dutch read (b. 1560), Dutch

43a, 55: for Gelle read Jelle

43b, 24: for 139-266 and 142-44 read 139-266

52a, 33, and 53b, 14: for Pensionenstichting read Pensioenstichting

53b, 47: for D. Rahusen read G. H. Rahusen

62b, 25: for 1926 read 1925

96a, 4: for Arundel Co. read St. Marys Co.

100a, 26: for Michelsberg read Michelsburg

104a, 39: for 1674 read 1670

107a, 50: for Cosquine read Cosquino

133b, 5: for Joannis read Joannes

133b, 45: for 1535 read 1534

137a, 34: for naeus and Tertullian. Additions were made in the read through references made to it by Ire-

145b, 50: for Bärber read Gärber

158b, 15: for Groote Spyker read Kleine Spyker

158b, 18: for church of the Old Frisians called "De kleine Zon" (Little Sun) read "kleine Zon," the church of a splinter group from the Zon located Arnhem, Ring, 162: Add to bibl.: J. A. A. Meyer, "Hondert jaar Doopsgezind leven in de Ring Akkrum," in Stemmen VI (1957) No. 1, 10-19.

162b, 14: for I read II; for II read II, 2

171a, 9: for 1644 read 1694

179a, 26: for 1699 read 1649

179a, 26: for Haarlem and . . . Zonists. read Haarlem. In 1664, it joined the Zonists when Cornelis Standertsz, Sybrandt Cornelisz, and Jan Aertsz signed the Verbondt (q.v.) van Eenigheydt.

179b, 19: for 1946-48 read 1946-47

Augsburger, Aaron, 188b: Ord. bishop in 1900; served as president of the Central Conference 1899 and 1906-11, and as conference secretary for many years. Married Emma Schertz Feb. 20, 1889; d. Jan. 8, 1950.

191b, 26: for 5, 6, and 7 read 5, 6, 7, and 8

191b, 27: insert (after by): Georg Blaurock

197b, 12-15: Ambrosius Spittelmayer was not a Schwertler; he is confused here with Hans Spittelmayer who was one.

201a, 41 for 1567 read 1568

Baer family, 211b: Samuel Bär was preacher in the Immelhausen, Palatinate (q.v.), congregation c1766; about the same time Hans Bär served as a preacher in the Bockshaft (q.v.) congregation. Henry Baer was ordained minister in 1771 in the Swamp (q.v.) congregation in Bucks County, Pa.

215a, 36: for Noordhoorn read Noordhorn

Balk, 216b: Add to bibl.: Carl F. Brüsewitz, "De Doopsgezinden van Balk," Stemmen V (1956) No. 4, 81-95; idem, "The Mennonites of Balk, Friesland," MQR XXX (1956) No. 1, 19-31; Marie Yoder, "The Balk Dutch Settlement near Goshen, Indiana, 1853-1889," MQR XXX (1956) No. 1, 32-43.

215b, 1: for became read (b. c1645 at Burtscheid, Germany) was one of the delegates sent by the Amsterdam Lamist congregation in 1672 to the Palatine Mennonites to investigate their needs (Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 1410, 1412-16). He became 215b, 28: for Mennonites, read Mennonites. He was an elder in Flanders, Belgium, and was the author of "Brief tot vereeniging der Vriezen," in de Buyser's (q.v.) Huys-boeck (1643).

216a, 8: for 1854. read 1854. It was the last congregation to join the Conference of Friesland (1855).

221a, 25: for 193 read p. 193

225b, 64: for Works II: 201a read Writings, 244

226b, 50: for at one place read at three places (Writings 123, 139, 350)

233a, 43: for Barber, Jans read Barber Jans

265b, 5: (q.v.) is to be omitted

269a, 5: for preacher read elder

269a, 10: omit Inv. Arch. Amst. I, Nos. 539, 557, 560-64;

270a, 53: The Waarachtige Historie was not written by Corvinus, but is a Dutch translation of Warhaftige Historie, attributed by Cornelius (Berichte der Augenzeugen über das münsterische Wiedertäuferreich) to joint authorship by Heinrich Dorpius (named in the title) and Dietrich Fabricius von Anholt.

282a, 17: for 400 read 40

334a, 8: for Nicolaes read Nicolaes

334a, 36: for Peter read Pieter

339b, 47: for 1646 read Aug. 1644

379b, 48: for (1881-85) read (1881-84), Hindelooopen (1884-85)

341a, 33: for DB read DJ 1837, 55 ff.; DB 1882, 53;

341a, 33: for 64 read 64: 1918, 107;

366b, 14: for Collegiant . . . Holland read Amsterdam

380b, 33: for 1936 read 1937

380b, 51: for 1858 read 1868

381a, 1: for Willem read Willemsz

381a, 43: for 517 read 499, 517

392b, 20: for (from 1716) read 1716-37

395a, 52: for 1935 read 1926

399a, 16: for Lancaster read Lancaster County

399a, 42: for E.M.S. read The Old Order group under Bishop Joseph O. Weaver, belonging to the Weaverland Conference, also worships here. E.M.S.

416a, 11: for 1740 read 1738

424a, 6: add author's initials F.E.M.

439b, 29-30: for his death . . . 1822 read 1822 (d. Apr. 11, 1838)

440a, 6: for 1863-67 read 1863-68

440a, 13: for Joens read Jeens

450a, 62: for Lamist read Bloemstraat Old Frisian

Bruin, 450: There were several other Mennonite preachers with this name.

Bruyn, 455: The C. C. Bruyn mentioned here was Cornelis Claesz Bruyn (Bruin), a preacher in the Amsterdam Old Frisian Bloemstraat congregation, the father of Claas Bruin (q.v.). Kornelis Bruyn served at Sneek 1746-57, Aardenburg 1757-63, Sneek 1763-72, and Nijmegen 1772-83. Probably neither belonged to this patrician Amsterdam family.

Buitenpost, 465 f.: The Mennonites of Buitenpost organized on April 20, 1957, as an independent congregation. It now (1959) has 57 baptized members; the pastor of Veenwouden (q.v.) is in charge. A meetinghouse, built by a group of Mennonite Voluntary Service workers, was dedicated on Dec. 1, 1957.

466a, 35: for 1744). read 1744). He was born c1710 at Amsterdam, served at Koog-Zaandijk and Krommenie, and at Alkmaar 1741-d.47.

467b, 11-19: for title of first edition, see Widertöuf-feren Vrsprung

Bure, Idelette de, 471: Idelette was probably the daughter of Lambert van Buren, who with his daughter, her husband Jean Stordeur, and a few others, was expelled from Liège, Belgium, in 1533, because they were Anabaptists. They moved to Strasbourg (q.v.), where Stordeur and his wife were converted by John Calvin (q.v.).

475a, 61: omit Putnam.

486a, 60: for vdZ. read J.M. (i.e., J. Maarse)

Calcar, van, 490: The present van Calcar family mostly descends from Peter Lienders (Oberhofen, Switzerland 1677-Sappemeer 1755), who emigrated to Sappemeer (q.v.) in 1711. His grandson Pieter Pieters Lienders (Lienderts, Leenerts) took the family name of van Calcar. He lived at Hoogezand near Sappemeer and is the Pieter van Kalker named in this article, serving the church as preacher 1786-1807 (not 1812).

490a, 7: for 1755-78 read 1755-72

Calvaart family, 494b: see Supplement, p. 1069, for addition

Calvary (495a) Mennonite Church (GCM), Quarryville, Pa.: S. S. Amstutz served as pastor 1919-35. A Baptist minister called in 1957 to serve, led the congregation into "independency"; most of the original Mennonite stock then joined the Bethel (GCM) church in Lancaster.

497a, 52: for Psychopanny chia read Psychopannychia

499b, 39: for 1531 read 1532

Cate, ten, 525: Izaak ten Cate, d. 1839 at Noordbroek, was trained for the ministry by pastor A. S. Cuperus (q.v.) at Knijpe, and appointed ministerial candidate by the church board of Knijpe. He was the father of Steven Blaupot (q.v.) ten Cate and of Herman Izaaksz ten Cate (not Herman J. ten Cate), who also served at Ouddorp 1824-28. A. Hermansz ten Cate (p. 529) was Herman Izaaksz ten Cate's son.

525b, 56: for Herman J. ten Cate read Herman Izaaksz ten Cate

525b, 56: for Pieterzijl read Ouddorp 1824-28, Pieterzijl

540b, 13: for 1931 read 1935

Chelcicki, Peter, 552: Peter Brock's Political and Social Doctrines of the Unity of Czech Brethren in the 15th and Early 16th Centuries (The Hague and London, 1957), based on a University of London

Ph.D. diss., is the first comprehensive English treatment of the man.

556b, 64: for 1949. read 1929, the last issue being Dec. 31, 1950.

584a, 58: for 23 read 24

585, folio: for Gemuetsgespraecht read Gemuetsgespraech

586a, 37: for Centuries. read Centuries; ML II, 66.

589a, 38: for Geschiedskundige Naasporingen read Geschiedkundige Nasporingen

603a, 14: for E.M.S. read The Old Order group under Bishop Joseph O. Weaver, belonging to the Weaverland Conference, also worships here. E.M.S.

614a, 58: for 1648 read 1649

628a, 49: for Bevredigte read Bevedigde (q.v.)

628b, 25: for Velderhande read Veelderhande

635a, 10: for with read without; for possession read use

635b, 14: for Revolution read Civil War

636a, 34: for 12,000 read 23,000

655a, 12: for 1943 read 1743

662a, 37: add R. N. C. Hunt, "Communist Experiments of the 16th Century" (Edinburgh Review, April 1927)

663a, 32: for de Croix read du Croix

666a, 37: for Arch. f. Ref.-Gesch. read Blätter für württ. Kirchengesch. (1937) 64-76

727b, 7: for Sarum, Lincon read Sarum (i.e., Salisbury), Lincoln

732b, 64: for 1490 read 1470

744b, 41: for necessity. read necessity, and partly as a result of stimulation and leadership provided by a small group of G.C.M. Russian Mennonites who settled in Cuauhtemoc town.

745a, 23: for its read preserving its traditional parochial

747b, 50: for in 1947 read since 1947

747b, 52: for Sunday-school and youth work. read Sunday school.

747b, 54: for services read services and youth work

747b, 59: for 1950, 130 baptized members. It read 1958, 200 baptized members, with David Koop as minister. By 1950 it

Illustrations, page 24, picture 1: for Woman in Church read Kuchenfrau

Volume II

xib, 45: change address for Robert Foth to Colonia, Uruguay

Correction of duplicate sets of initials as follows: J. H. Epp (pp. 4, 525, 706, 708); J. D. Hartzler (p. 670) and J. D. Hiebert (p. 538); J.R. and J.I.R. are the same person.

Daele, van, 2: Lambrecht van Dale (Daele) fled from Meenen or Kortrijk, Belgium, to Goch in Germany and from there in 1577 to Haarlem; he was an outstanding linen bleacher and merchant, and greatly stimulated the linen business in Haarlem. He was the ancestor of the Haarlem van Dale family. (S. C. Rechtodoorzee Greup-Roldanus, Gesch. der Haarlemmer Blekerijen, The Hague, 1936, 24 f., 27 note 6.)

5b, 48: for now called read sometimes called

6b, 7: for 1767 read 1776

11b, 26: add Hedwig-Penners-Ellwart, Die Danziger Bürgerschaft nach Herkunft und Beruf 1536-1709 (Herder Institut, Marburg, 1954) 453 ff.

61b, 29: for Leeuwarden read Ezumazijl in Groningen

Dirk, Philips, 66a, 50: A previously unknown letter by Dirk Philips was published by J. ten Doornkaat Koolman, "Een onbekende brief van D. P.," in Nederl. Archief voor Kerkgeschiedenis XLIII (1959) No. 1, 15-21.

73a, 18: omit even Dirk Philips came

79a, 57: add author's initials R.F.

99a, 54: for Hausmann read Hansmann

112b, 35: for Oct. 21, 1543 read Oct. 23, 1534

Eastern Mennonite College, 134b, 36: Presidents of the college have been J. B. Smith 1917-22, A. D. Wenger 1922-35, J. L. Stauffer 1935-50, J. R. Mumaw 1950- . Deans have been C. K. Lehman 1924-56, Ira Miller 1956- .

135b, 34: for 1561 or 1562 read 1565 or 1566

138a, 9: for 1856 read 1855

143b, 6: for 1718 read 1618

Eiderstedt, 170: Adah B. Roe, Anna Owena Hoyers, Poetess of the 17th Century (Ph.D. dissertation at Bryn Mawr College 1915, published as Bryn Mawr College monographs Vol. XIX), treats Anabaptist-Mennonite movements in Eiderstedt (to 1616) and Tönning (to 1642).

175b, 42: for J. E. Reimer read G. E. Reimer

175b, 43: for (1948) read (July 1949)

213a, 49: for LXIII read LXVIII

226a, 17: for J. Beets read P. Beets

233b, 39: for Church read E.M.B. church

233b, 42: for M.B. read E.M.B.

233b, 45: for Neb. read John F. Epp (b. 1883) was long a minister and elder of the Bethesda G.C.M. Church at Henderson. Aaron J. Epp is pastor of the First G.C.M. Church at Reedley, Cal., and Dan Epp is manager of the Mennonite Press at North Newton, Kan.

236a, 11: for D. A. Neufeld read A. A. Neufeld

239a, 52: for Freiburg, Germany read Basel, Switzerland

239b, 5: for (1526) read (1509)

291a, 50: for Unusels read Munsels

Fasting, 317: A printed letter (Brief tot Vreedberegdinge) was issued by the ministers of the Amsterdam Lamist congregation on Sept. 16, 1627, inviting the Dutch Mennonites who favored the unification of several branches to observe a day of fasting and prayer. (Handelinghe der Ver-eenigde Vlaemse en Duytse Doops-gesinde Gemeeynten . . ., Vlissingen, 1666, 36.)

328b, 32: for Oct. 2 read Oct. 5

330a, 4: for lasted . . . reunited. read ended in a merger with the de-Hondt-volk. A letter of June 25, 1655 (Inv. Arch. Amst. II, 2, No. 64), shows that the group was still in existence in that year, unless the term Lucas-Filipsvolk here means the united body.

332b, 59: Note that the illustration referred to is found in Vol. III, p. 13, No. 3

342b, 27: for c1700 read Sept. 28, 1703

343a, 13: for voorbeelden read voorbeelden

344b, 27: for Netherlands. read Netherlands. In 1897 this fund took over the Zwolsche Weduwfonds.

349a, 33: for 19 read 16

349a, 35: for 1874, 12 read 1876, 8

349a, 36: for 9 read 8

350b, 65: for whole. read whole. Daniel Musser reports in his Reformed Mennonite Church (Lancaster, 1873), "The washing of feet, if not rejected, was at least practically omitted for many years" (p. 241).

357b, 19: for pages. read pages, published in 1626.

358b, 4 and 26: for 1562 read 1558

394b, 16: for J. G. Frerichs, b. 1880 read Johan Gerard Frerichs, b. Dec. 8, 1880

407a, 50: for 3 per cent). read 3 per cent; in 1586, however, one fourth of the population is said to have been Mennonite).

Friesland Sociëteit, 411: Add to bibl.: M. L. Deenik, De Friesche Doopsgezinde Sociëteit (Amsterdam, n.d.).

Galicia, 436b: Friedrich Metz, Die Rheinlande als Auswanderungsgebiet (1932?), cites Joh. Eimann, Der deutsche Kolonist oder die deutsche Ansiedlung unter Kaiser Joseph dem Zweiten in den Jahren 1783-1787 im Bacser Comitatz (1820).

471a, 33: for E.K.G. read E.G.K.

474b, 37: for Carel van Gent read Karel van Gent

477a, 43: for Täuferprozesse read Ketzlerprozesse

487b, 14: for by him read by his group, 16 being by Marpeck himself

490a, 7: for 1755-78 read 1755-72

490a, 11: for 1812 read 1807

490a, 12: for J. D. van Calcar read Jan Daniel van Calcar

Gerrets, Vrou, 502: Blaupot ten Cate (Holland II, 210) mentions an edition of her Liedtboecxken published at Alkmaar in 1619.

502b, 4: for composed read erroneously considered the author of Gheestelijck Kruidt-Hofken, 513: The first and second editions were published at De Rijp in 1633 and 1637.

Gherwen, Abraham van, 514: Blaupot ten Cate (Holland II, 211) mentions seven editions of van Gherwen's hymnal under differing titles, published at Amsterdam in 1612 and at Gouda in 1617, 1617, 1618, 1620, 1620, and 1818.

519a, 28: for grandson read great-grandson

520a, 42: after 1881 read d. Haarlem 1959

530b, 52: for Barnaul, read Barnaul and Amur,

530b, 53: for Man. read Man.; Mexico; and Menno, Paraguay.

Goethe, Wolfgang von: see article at end of Supplement.

542, 1: for A. G. Marten read H. H. Marten

543b, 28: for 1948 read 1947

543b, 40: for Antwerp read Gent

544a, 55: for The pulpit is now vacant. read In 1957 this congregation was combined with Bovenknijspe (q.v.); the combined congregation is served (1957) by Pastor H. Anneman, who lives at Gorredijk.

559b, 12: for grandson read son or grandson

562b, 55: for Since . . . vacant. read On July 3, 1949, after a vacancy of some years, these congregations made an agreement with the De Rijp (q.v.) congregation to be served by its pastor.

Greiner, 577: Add to bibl.: G. Bossert, "Aus der Nebenkirchlichen religiösen Bewegung der Reformationszeit in Württemberg," Blätter f. Württ. Kirchengesch. (May 1929) 1-40.

577b, 37: after Mennonites add in 1814

Grisons, 586b: Add to bibl.: O. Vasella, "Von den Anfängen der bündnerischen Täuferbewegung," Ztscht für Schweiz. Kirchengesch., 1939, 165-84.

601b, 14: for 1839 read 1829

601b, 59: for Zimmerman read Nussbaum

603b, 55: for Barnaul, read Barnaul and Amur,

603b, 56: for Kan.; read Kan.; East Reserve, Man.;

617b, 19: for C.B.H. read C.P.H.

617b, 48: for 1946 read 1948

619b, 56: for Hadewyck read Hadewych

Hesse, 727a: Add to bibl.: Allen W. Dirrim, "The Hessian Anabaptists, Background and Development to 1540" (unpublished doctoral dissertation at Indiana University), 1959

Hamburg-Altona, 643: Add to bibl.: Ludwig Brinner, Die deutsche Grönlandsfahrt (Abhandlungen zur Verkehrs- und Seegeschichte. Hanseatischer Geschichtsverein) (Berlin, 1913).

Hans Busschaert (648b): This subject is identical with the subject of the article Busschaert, Hans (I, 485a)

Haren, 661 f.: The Mennonite circle of Haren developed into a congregation in 1957. This congregation is united with that of Roden (q.v.). Miss Offerhaus served as pastor at Haren until 1957. Since 1958 G. de Groot has been the pastor. A Menno-Home was opened on Oct. 17, 1953.

676b, 29: for Kreutzingen read Kneutzingen

689b, 30: for (1957) read (1960)

Heilbronn, 692: Add to bibl.: Moritz von Rauch, Dr. Johann Lachmann, der Reformator Heilbronn's (Heilbronn, 1923).

694a, 57: for 337 read 227

701a, 21: for see Maren (Maeren) read see Maeren (Maren)

703b, 36: for deacon read preacher 1664-68

703b, 45: for articles. read articles. He resigned in 1668 because of the continuing strife.

707a, 52: The meetinghouse was sold when there were no longer members living in Heppenheim.

707a, 59: for 1935 read 1933

707a, 60, 61: replace by the following—it was purchased in 1939 by the Mennonite Publishing House and continued under its first name "Graybill Book Store" and under manager Silas Graybill until 1949 when Claude Shisler became manager. In 1951 the name became Herald Book Store.

729a, 1: for 1755 read 1752

738b, 15: for In . . . Sask. read In 1955 J. N. Hiebert was the E.M.B. pastor at Dalmeny, Sask. P. G. Hiebert is the C.G.C. pastor at Atmore, Ala., and Franz Hiebert at Swalwell, Alberta.

739a, 41: for nephew read son

Hindeloopen, 744: Concerning the meetinghouses in Hindeloopen little is known. The present meetinghouse was the former "Kleyne Huys" church, built c1680 and remodeled in 1850 and 1931.

752a, 16: for by the same author read an unknown author (Luther?)

752a, 46: for Duck read Dick

753a, 17: for Gedenkschrift read Bericht über die 400 jährige Jubiläumsfeier der Mennoniten

754b, 41: for an read on

754b, 51: for 1949 read 1944

756b, 4: for Christian Classics, published in 1956 one volume read Library of Christian Classics, published in 1957 a volume, Spiritualist and Anabaptist Writers as

762b, 61: for 1906 read 1937

763a, 45: for BRN read BRN V, 1909

766a, 13: add to Rempel book title the following: Bevölkerung und Wirtschaft, 1825 (Leipzig, 1940) 108pp.

788b, 52: for 1857 read 1851

Holmes County, 792b, 30: According to W. E. Farver, Jacob Miller, an Amish minister with his sons Henry and Jacob, Jr., in 1808 took up a section of land one mile north of Sugarcreek. In 1809 he brought his family from Pennsylvania, and his wife's nephew, Jonas Stutzman, who settled one-half mile south of Walnut Creek, the first settler in that township. (Sugarcreek Budget, June 25, 1959).

Holwerd, 795: The congregation possesses six fine silver communion cups, presented in 1778 by the Reformed church board as a gift because the Reformed congregation had used the Mennonite meetinghouse for nearly two years while its own church was being remodeled.

795b, 7: for 1629 read 1692, remodeled in 1748

795b, 11: for 1850 read 1849

812b, 36: for 1861, read 1860 to replace a former one built in 1735;

823b, 48: for Leatherman, Willard read Leatherman, Clair Hoffman, Willard

Hubmaier, 834b: Add to bibl.: Leonhard Theobald, "Balthasar Hubmaier," Ztscht f. bayr. Kirchengesch. (1941) 153-65.

839b, 41: for his death in 1781 read 1764. He died in 1781

Hymnology 870a: The article Anthoenis Courtsen (I, 129b) points out that much is learned about Anabaptist songs from the 1552 trial of Courtsen. He obtained from a tailor's journeyman a song which he wrote down in a book. He also possessed a Geestelick Liedtboucksen which contained many hymns. "From these documents it appears that 'Spiritual songs' were very numerous among the Mennonites, and that many compiled a collection of such hymns for themselves" (vdZ).

Illustrations, page 11, picture 5: for Goessel read La Junta;

picture 6: for La Junta read Goessel

Volume III

Ibersheim, 1 f.: The Dutch Naamlijst of the 18th century names as ministers at Ibersheim: Daniel Stauffer, elder 1739-c68, Jacob Wels (Weiss?) c1749-c78, Jacob Hiestand 1751-c78, Heinrich Seitz c1755-c70, Heinrich Stauffer, preacher 1758, elder 1768-after 1802, Jacob Müller 1770-c78, Jacob Wels 1776-after 1802, Daniel Stauffer 1780-c94, Daniel Hirschler 1781-after 1802, and Heinrich Christoph from 1784.

Imbroich, 12: Add to bibl.: Arno Schirokauer, "Der Druckort der Schriften des Thomas von Imbroich," Modern Language Notes, 1943, 346-50.

12a, 9: for Ilp (Den) read Ilp (Den Ilp)

12a, 24: for parsonage read parsonage of Den Ilp

14a, 52: for 1773 read 1783

15b, 11-17: The group at Surhuisterveen (q.v.) which practiced immersion were not Mennonites but a small group of followers of Alexander Mack, founder of the Church of the Brethren, who lived at Westerveen near Surhuisterveen 1720-29.

23b, 50: for 1855-65 read 1854

23b, 53: for about 1860 read 1876

23b, 59: for 1874-75 read 1874

25a, 38: for Reformed Mennonite read Apostolic Christian

26a, 2: for 1856 read 1862

27a, 34: for Teegarden in Marshall County read Lakeville in St. Joseph County

28a, 28, 35: for 1871 read 1872

28a, 37: for 1874-75 read 1875

Industrial School, 31a: In the Herald of Truth for July 14, 1904, and Jan. 12, 1905, six months financial reports of the Home for the Friendless were submitted by J. F. Brunk (MC). Already in the issue of Aug. 1, 1894, R. J. Heatwole (q.v.) had reported a visit to the Industrial School and Home. (See also Home for the Friendless.)

Italy, 55 f.: Add to bibl.: F. C. Church, Italian Reformers 1534-1564 (N.Y., 1932); Peter Dolbert, "Die Reformation in den italienischen Talschaften Graubündens nach dem Briefwechsel Bullingers" (unpublished dissertation at Univ. of Zürich, 1948).

87a, 22: for year read term

91b, 58: for Andres read Andreas

105a, 22: for Flanders, read Flanders, in 1562,

116, map: for East Union read Fairview; for Fairview read East Union

116a, 9: for sheriff read constable

122a, 14: for 1581 read 1851

125b, 34: for Flaccius read Flacius

131a, 23: for 1950 read May 1949

Jus Retractus, 132: Add to bibl.: E. H. Correll, Das Schweizerische Täufermennonitentum (Tübingen, 1925), full discussion pp. 91-100.

215a, 27: for 1785 read 1685

Krehbiel, 235: The Peter named in line 27 and the one in line 34 are probably identical. Peter Krehbiel's departure from Switzerland is described in a poem by Daniel Krehbiel, "Peter Krehbiel's Abschied von der Schweiz," Gem.-Kal. 1911, 46 f.

235a, 36: for 1770 read 1784

235a, 37: for 15 years later to Russia. read in 1796 to Volhynia.

259a, 30: for 1957, No. 1 read XLVII (1956) 252-59, "Pilgram Marbeck und das oberdeutsche Täuferium. Ein neuer Handschriftenfund."

273, map: Gehman (School) should be north of the turnpike about where the "G" of Gehman is.

276b, 3: for Ridenbach read Reidenbach

277b, 12: for 1835 read 1836

284a, 42: for p. 12 ff. read pp. 26 ff.

336b, 33: for frame read stone

359b, 32: for (1953) read (1935)

361a, 35: for Wildenbruck's read the hero of Wildenbruch's

365b, 33: for bis in den Tod read bis ans Ende

372a, 38: The fifth edition appeared in 1922.

435a, 51: for 1887 read 1897

444b, 35: for Marpeck, Pilgram read Rothenfelder, Jörg

491b, 55: for his name read his name favorably

493a, 13: for October read May

493a, 34: for held. read held. He became a citizen in July 1528.

493a, 35: for 1530 read 1530 (possibly 1528)

493b, 58: for two read four

494b, 35: for Jan. 31, read New Year's Day,

542b, 35: for 1533 read 1536

567a, 35: for 1863 read 1852. Mellinger was born at Ruchheim, Palatinate, Germany, became an orphan at 10, landed in America Oct. 16, 1772, was ordained deacon in 1790. He also served the Swiss immigrants who settled near Wooster, Ohio. W.D.S.

583a, 31: for 1537 read 1539

583a, 33: for 1537 read 1538

583a, 62: for 1619 read 1616

Mennonite Brethren in Christ Church (603b) of Pennsylvania: This body changed its name to Bible Fellowship Church April 11, 1959.

629a, 24: for Training School for Nurses read School of Nursing

629a, 39: for tuberculosis read tuberculosis (until 1955)

629b, 50: for nursing. read nursing. The superintendents of the hospital have been Allen H. Erb 1916-51, W. J. Dye 1951-58, and Luke Birky 1958-

644a, 1: for of the read of the Association (Vereinigung) of

666b, 22: for County, read County, Ind.,

694a, 61: for Kennet read Kennel

727a, 48: for Müller read Muller

791a, 28: for pages. read pages (copy in GCL).

791a, 37: for 1535 read 1555

Music, 791b, 65: In 1594 the Anabaptists of the Gladbach area were meeting in Alitgen Cüper's house where their singing could be heard daily, especially in the evening" (see Rheydt).

795a, 36: for J. G. van der Smissen read C. J. van der Smissen

799b, 7: for 1663 read 1623. About 1725 a mutual fire insurance organization was started at Lunau (Gross-Lunau?) near Culm in Poland.

806a, 56: for Darmstadt read Hesse-Darmstadt

818b, 50: for Neel, Mypeis read Neel Mypeis

826b, 52: for 1533 read 1534

827b, 6: for 1544 ff. read 1556

828a, 6: for baptists." Menno . . . followers. read baptists."

828a, 14: for Reinier read Cornelis

828a, 42: for 1567 read 1566

828a, 65: for to read by

828b, 36: for In 1598 . . . at read In 1589 the stricter ones, soon called Old Frisians, banned Lubbert Geritsz, who became the leader of the Young Frisians. A special group of the Old Frisians were the Jan-jacobsgezinden, split off in 1598, named after Jan Jacobsz (q.v.), who had a considerable following in Friesland and also at

828b, 52: for the Young read most of the Young

830a, 19: for public read Reformed

830b, 1: for 50,000 read 500,000

831a, 40: for they read some of them

831b, 1: for 1696 read 1671

831b, 58: for 1829 read 1825

832a, 64: for acquire read give

833b, 64: for 1795 read 1798

834b, 7: for 1624 read 1634

834b, 52: for Orangist (Monarchist) read Orangist

835b, 3: for J. J. le Cosquino read I. J. le Cosquino

836b, 1: for largely read partly

837b, 56: for adopted read compiled

838a, 7: for Mankes-Zerneke read Zernike

838b, 48: for funds read fonds

- 840a, 9: for forbidden read made impossible
 844a, 25: for 1742 read 1772
 850b, 38: for brethren read Reformed
 851a, 47: for novel read novels
 856b, 53: for South Russia read Russia
 856b, 58: for farms . . . World War II. read farms.
 859b, 31: for 1614 read 1694
 860b, 1: for in Torney near read in the Torney heights in
Note: The Pax men did not build the houses as reported. By special agreement with the MCC, which made some contributions, the German government granted Mennonite refugees from West Prussia the privilege to purchase the houses, which were built by a contractor.
 860b, 2: for 1950-54 read 1950-51
 869a, 52: for Parmentier. Later . . . Alcmaers read Parmentier.
 872b, 9: for Lutheran read Reformed
 872b, 20: for Johann read Jehan
 875b, 18: for 1860 read 1880
 878b, 30: for Nieuwland read the Nieuwland
 880b, 7: for at Nijmegen on April 9 read on April 9
 892a, 59: for lived read mostly lived
 904b, 2: for Shortly . . . War II read By adopting a "conscientious objector law" in 1926
 920a, 33: for 1569 read 1659

Volume IV

- 5a, 10: for 1685 read 1585
 5a, 13: omit (DB 1899, 182)
Oath, 20: After (DB 1875, 93-100) add: In many Dutch towns it became usual that in place of the oath of citizenship the Mennonites declared to have spoken the truth or promised to speak the truth "by mannes waerheyt" (by a man's truth) and eventually by a handclasp ("handtastinger") with the official administering the oath.
 8b, 44: for 93, 197 ff. read 33-41
 72a, 6: for Fauust read Faut
 72a, 50: for 19— read 1930
 96b, 48: Add to bibl.: J. Melles, Joachim Oudaen (Utrecht, 1958)
 99b, 8: for a preacher read preacher 1649-72
 99b, 39: for d. about 1666 read d. 1682
 112b, 56: after 2274 add II, 2, Nos. 686-90
 112b, 71: after Naamlijst add Paul Schowalter, "Der Kirchenbau in den Mennonitengemeinden von Pfalz-Hessen," Gem.-Kal. 1953, 36-44;
 133a, 7: for Klass read Klaas
 133a, 29: for Sippesz read Sippez
Pennsylvania-German, 142a: Add to bibl.: Otto Springer, "The Study of the Pennsylvania-German Dialect," Journal of English and Germanic Philology (Jan., 1943, pp. 1-39).
 169a, 36: for Loosevelt read Loosvelt

- 169a, 47: for 74 read 174
 171a, 14: for Pieter read Peter
 173b, 19: for 159-61 read 160-62
 181b, 37: for 1827 read 1823
Pleasant View (192a) Mennonite Church (MC), Schellsburg, Bedford Co., Pa. Supplement: Settlement was begun in 1872 from the Johnstown district, served by visiting ministers till 1914, meetinghouse built in 1910, organized as a congregation in 1914 when Clayton Graybill was ordained as pastor. Charles Shetler has been pastor since 1939, the congregation is a member of the Allegheny Conference.
 196b, 62: for see Pluen read see Pleun
 216b, 12: for Prette read Pretle
 219b, 33: for Simonatz read Simonsz
 225b, 3: for and Horst read Horst, Ausmass, Jamerau, and Dorposch.
 225b, 22: for 1723 (?) and probably in 1719 read in 1723 and once about a decade earlier.
 225b, 31-32 (excl. of table): for Unruh read Unrau; and for Foth read Voht; and add Schmidt, Koehn, Pankratz, Sparling, Frey, and Buller.
 225b, 39: for Unruh read Unrau
 226a, 2: for Richart read Richert
 226a, 7: for ?—? read 1718-?
 226a, 8: for 1760-80 read 1760-1775
 226a, 10: for Pancratz read Pankratz
 226a, 11: add The first known elder was Berent Ratzlaff, born c1660.
 228b, 39: for Doopsgezindeperiodeken read Doopsgezinde periodeken
 229a, 12: for Overa read Over
 235a, 42: for Zwartendijke read Zwartendijk
 252b, 5: for 114 read 109, 114
 256b, 31: for vor read nach
 258a, 47: for H.A. read H.Ha.
 273b, 28: for 499 read 449
 281a, 20: for area conferences read Area Conference (beginning in 1957)
Reiseprediger, 280-81: Dutch Mennonites have since 1897 had special provision for visiting ministers to serve scattered members. In 1958 ten such "bezoekleerar" were on duty making annual pastoral visits to all diaspora members. (See Verstrooiing).
 293b, 42: for Täfer read Täufer
Religious Liberty, 293b: Add to bibl.: Walter Hamel, "Bekenntnisfreiheit," Ztscht f. d. gesammte Staatswissenschaft (1953, pp. 54-77), which treats of Anabaptist and Schwenckfelder objections to state-imposed religious formulations advocated by Brenz, Bucer, and Capito.
 299b, 47: for F.R. read Ha.R.
 331a, 62: for ende read en de
 331b, 31: for Socinians. In Amsterdam . . . Obbesz (q.v.). read Socinians and even bade him come over for a disputation with their leaders.
 334a, 65: add author's initials vdZ.

336a, 18: for 1884 read 1862

336a, 20: after Zwolle add founded c1860

346b : Note: Roaring Spring left the S.W. Pa. (MC) conference in April 1912 and joined the Eastern District Conference (GCM) in May 1912. In 1958 the membership was 33. The meetinghouse is in the town.

352a, 31: for (c1735-1815) read (1736-1826), manufacturer and 373a, 54: for 1765, read 1765 (most of the last two groups were Lutherans), 373b, 13: for Nothing read Little

Note: The six communion cups and two wine jars were saved.

373b, 29: for 31, 1951 read 21, 1951

373b, 43: for Councillors read deacons

376b, 23: for (b. 1888) read (1888-1958)

379b, 30: for 1722 read 1772

Russia, 393a: Add to bibl.: Friedrich Matthaei, Die deutschen Kolonisten in Russland (Leipzig, 1866, 389 pp.).

Sattler, 427b, 38: Sattler appears in the Zürich court records twice, on March 25 and Nov. 18, 1525, both times as a prisoner, both times required to swear the Urfehde and to be expelled from the canton. Both times he was before the court in company with other Anabaptist leaders including Grebel, Manz, and Blaurock. (TA Zürich.)

427b, 41: for J.J.T. read J.J.Th.

446b, 17: for 1933 read 1938

468a, 35: Herman Schmitt was born June 20, 1899, and Otto Stauffer on Aug. 23, 1904.

472a, 60-61: Omit but . . . others.

472a, 63: for 15 read 16.

472b, 51: for Klassen read Classen.

473a, 23: for Klassen read Classen.

Sermons, 503a, 59: After Prussian-Russian line add as was the practice of the Conservative (fijne) Mennonites in the Netherlands up to the end of the 18th century, and occasionally even until c1855.

503b, 42: After prolific add Van der Zijpp is of the opinion that parts of the first (1539) edition of Menno Simons' Foundation-Book go back to sermons preached earlier by Menno.

539b, 60: add author's initials C.K.

561a, 65: Note: George Fox never used the expression "inner light," but spoke of the "light of Christ," meaning the guidance of the indwelling Christ in the converted individual.

Society of Friends, 565a: Add to bibl.: Anna Corder, "Quakerism in Friedrichstadt 1663-1724," Journal of the Friends Historical Society XXXIX (1947), 49-53; H. J. Cadbury, "Quakerism in Friedrichstadt," ibid. XLIII (1951) 17-21; Wm. I. Hull, "Quakerism in Danzig," The Bulletin of the Friends Historical Association XLI (1952) 81-92; H. J. Cadbury, "The First Settlement Meetings in Europe," JFHS XLIV (1952) 11-12. The first established Quaker meetings on the continent of Europe were Amsterdam 1656, Kriegsheim 1657, Rotterdam c1658, Hamburg 1659, Alkmaar 1660, Haarlem 1662, Friedrichstadt 1663, Lippenhuizen and Gorredijk, Lansmeer in Waterland c1665, Groningen 1669, Leeuwarden c1670, Emden 1674, Crefeld 1679.

582a, 46: add author's initials vöZ.

595b, 42: add author's initials vöZ.

619a, 45: for p. lvii and 274 read lviii-lvix and 321-23

633b, 33: add author's initials vöZ.

645a, 60: for Strawberry read Strawberry Hill

663b, 63: for Brethren Church read Church of the Brethren

Tersteegen, 698: Note in the article Grombach the last paragraph reporting the strong interest in the writings of Tersteegen by the Grombach Mennonite preachers, including financial contributions toward publication costs.

Theologia Deutsch, 704: In an epistle in the Kunstbuch (#30) Leupold Scharnslager refers to Theologia Deutsch and Imitation of Christ as writing of "Gelassenheit." He is probably the source of the four or five references to Theologia Deutsch in the second half of Marpeck's Verantwortung.

739b, 47: for Griner . . . Townline read Griner congregation was established in 1922 as a branch of Townline, and Pleasant Grove in 1948 as a branch of Griner, while Riverview was established in 1952 by former members of both Townline and Griner.

875b, 18: S. B. ten Cate (Geschiedkundig Onderzoek) was among the last of the Mennonite historians to hold to the Waldensian origin of the Mennonites, although with grave hesitation (vöZ).

883a, 6: for 1898 read 1897-1905

883a, 61: for as did also read in 1925.

899b, 31: for Three hundred read Four hundred and for ten congregations, eight read seven congregations, five

899b, 36: for 289 read 403

905a, 23: for in 1723 read c1723. John Weaver was in West Lampeter c1717, and in 1721 applied for a grant of land for the three Weaver brothers.

907a, 19: for Preussen read Preusen

907a, 33: omit In Prussia

907a, 49: for 79 read 76

907b, 19: for Cornelius P. Wedel read Cornelius P. Wedel and Helena Wiebe

West Prussia. 927b: Add to bibl.: Ernst Wermke, Bibliographie der Geschichte von Ost- und Westpreussen (Königsberg, 1933); Hans Jessen, Gott und der König. Friedrich des Grossen Religion und Religionspolitik (Berlin, 1936).

945b, 55: for Gerhard read Bernhard

1000b, 16: for J.A.Har. read J.A.Ha.

1015b, 43: Add author's initials vöZ.

Zürich, 1047a: Add to bibl.: Sinaida Zuber, Die zürcherische Auswanderung von ihren Anfängen bis gegen Ende des 18. Jahrhunderts (Zürich Ph.D. dissertation, Turbenthal, 1931); Werner Schnyder, Bevölkerung der Stadt u. Landschaft Zürich 14. bis 17. Jahrhundert (Ph.D. dissertation, Univ. of Zürich 1925, publ. in Schweizer Studien zur Geschichtswissenschaft XIV, Heft 1).

Biographical Notices of Editors

EDITOR

C. Henry Smith, Ph.D. (1875-1948), was born at Metamora, Ill., June 8, 1875, received his B.A. (1903) and Ph.D. (1907, Phi Beta Kappa) both at the University of Chicago. He was a lifelong teacher of history: Elkhart Institute 1898-1900, Goshen College 1903-5 and 1908-13, and Bluffton College 1913-48, and served as the first dean of Goshen College 1909-13. He was until 1915 a member of the Mennonite Church (MC), thereafter of the General Conference Mennonite Church. He served on the G.C.M. Publication Board 1940-48. For a list of his numerous writings see ME IV, 552. He was married to Laura Ioder; they had no children. Residence at Bluffton, Ohio. He died at Bluffton Oct. 18, 1948.

EDITOR

Harold Stauffer Bender, D.Theol., was born at Elkhart, Ind., July 19, 1895, received his B.A. (1918) at Goshen College, B.D. (1922) at Garrett Biblical Institute, M.A. (1923) at Princeton University, Th.M. (1923) at Princeton Theological Seminary, and D.Theol. (1935) at the University of Heidelberg, Germany. He has been a lifelong teacher: Hesston College 1918-20, Goshen College 1924-44 (dean 1931-44), Goshen College Biblical Seminary, professor and dean since 1944, Professor of Church History since 1927. He has been president of the Mennonite Historical Society since its founding in 1925, founder and editor of the Mennonite Quarterly Review 1927- , chairman of the Historical Committee of the Mennonite General Conference 1947- (secretary 1935-47), member of the Mennonite Central Committee Executive Committee 1930- , and chairman of the MCC Peace Section 1941- . He has been president of the Mennonite World Conference since 1952. His writings include Menno Simons, a Quadricentennial Tribute (1936) and Conrad Grebel (1950). He is editor of the series Studies in Anabaptist and Mennonite History. He has been a lifelong member of the Mennonite Church (MC). He was married to Elizabeth Horsch in 1923; they have two daughters. Residence at 1901 S. Main St., Goshen, Ind.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR

Cornelius Krahn, D.Theol., was born Aug. 3, 1902, at Rosenthal near Choritz, Ukraine, Russia, received his D.Theol. (1936) at the University of Heidelberg, Germany, after study at the seminaries at Wernigerode a.H. and at Neukirchen near Moers 1926-31, and at the universities of Berlin 1932-33, Amsterdam 1933-34, and Heidelberg 1934-36. In 1937 he came to the United States. He took an M.A. in German at the University of Wisconsin in 1939. He has been a teacher of Church History and German since 1939, first at Tabor College 1939-44, then at Bethel College 1944- , where he has also been director of the Bethel College Historical Library and founder and editor of Mennonite Life. He has been secretary of the Historical Committee of the G.C.M. Church 1947- . He is the author of Menno Simons (1496-1561), Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte und Theologie der Taufgesinnten (1936); revised C. Henry Smith's Story of the Mennonites (1950, 1957 ed.); and is editor of the Mennonite Historical Series. He is a member of the G.C.M. Church. He was married to Hilda Wiebe in 1940; they have three daughters. Residence at North Newton, Kan.

MANAGING EDITOR

Melvin Gingerich, Ph.D., was born Jan. 29, 1902, at Kalona, Iowa, received his B.A. (1926) at Goshen College, and Ph.D. (1938) in history at the State University of Iowa. He has been a teacher of history at Washington (Iowa) Junior College 1930-41, Bethel College 1941-47, Goshen College part-time 1949- . Since 1947 he has been Research Director of the Mennonite Research Foundation, since 1947 Custodian of the Archives of the Mennonite Church, and since 1937 a member of the Historical Committee of the Mennonite General Conference. His books include Mennonites in Iowa (1939), Service for Peace (1949), and Who's Who Among the Mennonites (1943, Assistant Editor). He has been managing editor of the Mennonite Quarterly Review since 1952. He has been a lifelong member of the Mennonite Church (MC). He was married to Verna Roth in 1925; they have one son. Residence at 405 Marilyn Ave., Goshen, Ind.

ASSISTANT EDITOR

(Responsible for Germany)

Ernst Crous, Ph.D., was born March 6, 1882, at Crefeld, Germany. Educated at the universities of Marburg, Munich, Berlin, and Bonn, he received his Ph.D. in 1909 at the University of Bonn. His life career was that of librarian, trained at Hamburg, Jena, and Berlin, active at the Prussian State Library in Berlin 1918-46, where he was director 1920-25 of the project for a complete catalog of incunabula, and also for a time a teacher in the school of library service. Bombed out of Berlin, he moved to Göttingen in 1944; was retired in 1946. He spent the year 1949-50 in the United States as exchange professor at Goshen, Bluffton, and Bethel colleges.

In the German Mennonite Church he served as vice-chairman of the Vereinigung 1932-51, chairman of the Berlin Mennonite Church 1930-46, and chairman of the German Mennonite Relief Committee 1947-51. He organized the Göttingen Mennonite Church in 1946 and served as its elder-pastor to 1953. He has been president of the Mennonitischer Geschichtsverein since 1947, chairman of the Commission for Publication of Anabaptist Documents since 1948, and coeditor of the Men- nonitisches Lexikon 1947-58. He founded the Mennonitische Forschungsstelle (Mennonite Research Center) at Göttingen in 1948 and has been its director continuously. He is the author, in addition to his dissertation, Die religionsphilosophischen Lehren Lockes (1910), of numerous writings on the history of printing and type-founding as well as of Anabaptist and Mennonite history. He married Therese (Rose) Genthe in 1918, who was herself a trained librarian on the staff of the Prussian State Library, and who has remained his close associate in all his scholarly enterprises. Their two sons were lost in World War II in 1941. Residence at Calsowstr. 4, Göttingen, Germany.

ASSISTANT EDITOR

(Responsible for the Netherlands)

Nanne (Jacobs) van der Zijpp was born April 2, 1900, at Warns, Netherlands, and was educated for the ministry at the University of Amsterdam and the Amsterdam Mennonite Seminary 1920-25. He has been a lifelong Mennonite pastor, serving at Zijldijk 1926-28, Joure 1928-40, Almelo 1940-46, and Rotterdam 1946-. Since 1946 he has taught Mennonite history at the Seminary and since 1954 has been Lector at the University of Amsterdam. He has been a trustee of the A.D.S. since 1943 and a member of its executive committee since 1955. He is also a member of two A.D.S. committees, Theology and Spiritual Interests, and a trustee of the Elspeet Association since 1929 and its president since 1946. Chief publications include Geschiedenis der Doopsgezinden in Nederland (1952), De vroegere Doopsgezinden en de Krijgdsdienst (1930), and De Belijdenisgeschriften der Nederlandse Doopsgezinden (1954). He has served as editor or coeditor for a number of periodicals, including Stemmen uit de Doopsgezinde Broederschap (chairman of the editorial council 1952-58), Theologie en Practijk (1948-57), and as contributor to the Mennonitisches Lexikon since 1920. He was married to Antje Alberda in 1925; they have three children. Residence at Vredehofweg 36a, Rotterdam, Netherlands.

ASSISTANT EDITOR

(Responsible for former Austria-Hungary and the Hutterian Brethren)

Robert Friedmann, Ph.D., was born June 9, 1891, in Vienna, Austria, educated as an engineer in the Technical University of Vienna 1908-14, studied history and philosophy at the University of Vienna 1920-24 (Ph.D., 1924). He taught at Gymnasiums in Vienna 1925-38. He began his Anabaptist studies in 1923, when he was commissioned by the Verein für Reformationsgeschichte to edit a volume of Hutterite epistles, which is still to be published, and is to be followed by a volume of Hutterite theological documents (Glaubenszeugnisse oberdeutscher Taufgesinnter II) and one of Hutterite bibliography including all the manuscript codices. He left Austria in 1939 and reached the United States the same year, serving as Honorary Fellow at Yale Divinity School in 1940, and as Research Fellow in Anabaptist Studies at Goshen College 1940-43; part of the time he was visiting lecturer at Goshen College. Since 1945 he has been Professor of History and Philosophy at Western Michigan University. His chief publication is Mennonite Piety Through the Centuries (1949). He has been a member of the Eighth Street Mennonite Church (GCM) since 1941. He has two sons. Residence at 2109 Glenwood Drive, Kalamazoo, Mich.

Check List

Of Articles on Anabaptism and Related Themes

The following check list includes persons, places, topics, writers on Anabaptism, and books. Only articles of twenty lines or more are listed. Titles of books appear in italics. Asterisk (*) indicates an author. Two asterisks () indicate a martyr. Supplement is indicated by (S). The time period covered is 1520 to 1630.

- | | | | |
|------------------------------|-------------------------|--------------------------------|-------------------------|
| Aachen | Anneken | Beck, Hans | Brandhuber, |
| Aalsmeer | Anneken Hendriks | Beck, Joseph von* | Wolfgang |
| Aargau | Anneken vanden | Beckh, Blasius | Bratislava (Pressburg) |
| Aberli, Heinrich | Hove | Beckum, Mary van | Braun, Burkhard |
| Abraham Picolet | Anneken Jans | Beckum, Ursula von | Braun, Georg |
| Acronius, Ruardus | Anshelm, Valerius* | Bedenken | Breda |
| Adam Pastor | Anthoenis Courtsen | Beginsel . . . | Bregenzer Wald |
| Adige (Etsch) Valley | Anthoenis Elberts | Doopsgezinden | Breitinger, J. J.* |
| Adler, Clemens (S) | Anthonis van Cassele | Bekentenisse van beiden | Brenz, Johannes* |
| Adriaen Brael | Anti-Trinitarianism | Sacramenten | Breslau |
| Adriaen Cornelisz | Antonius von Köln | Bekentenisse , Obbe | Brethren |
| Adriaen van 's Graven- | Antwerp | Philipsz | Bretten |
| hage | Anwald, Hermann | Belgium | Breuning, Franz |
| Adriaen Jacobs | Apocrypha | Benrath, Karl* | Breuning, Hans |
| Adriaen Lourysz | Apollonia Ottes | Berbig, Georg* | Brez, Guy de* |
| Adriaen Pan | Apostolic Succession | Bergklooster | Brielle |
| Adriaenken | Appenzell | Bergmann, Cornelius* | Brixen |
| Jansdochter | Arbeiter, Hans | Beringer, Kurt | Brno (Brünn) |
| Aechtken Joris | Armentières | Berka | Brötli, Johannes |
| Adriaensdochter | Arnold, Gottfried* | Bern | Brownists |
| Aeffgen Lystyncx | Art | Betz, Hans | Brubacher, Hans |
| Aeltjen Baten | Article Book | Bible | Bruchsal |
| Ahlefeldt | Aschelberger, Stoffel | Bible, Inner and Outer | Bruck |
| Aichele, Berthold | Ascherham, Gabriel | Word | Bruckmaier, Georg |
| Ainsworth, Henry | Augsburg | Bible Translations | Bruderhof |
| Alba (Alva), Duke of | Augsburg, Peace of | Bibliographies | Brüderlich Vereinigung |
| Alberus, Erasmus | Augsburg Recesses | Bibliotheca Ref. Neerl. | Brüderliche Vereinigung |
| Albrecht of | Ausbund | Biel | Brugge |
| Brandenburg | Auspitz | Biestkens Bible | Brunfels, Otto* |
| Albrecht V of Bavaria | Austerlitz | Binder, Eucharius | Brussel, Bernhard |
| Albrecht Friedrich | Austria | Binder, Matthias | Brussels |
| Alcohol | Avoidance | Bisch, Rauff | Bucer, Martin |
| Aldegonde, Philips | Baden | Blaurer, Ambrosius | Büchel, Hans |
| Alenson, Hans A.* | Bader, Augustin | Blaurock, Georg | Bugenhagen, Johann* |
| Algerius | Bader, Johannes* | Blesdijk, Nicholas van | Bühel, Konrad van |
| Alkmaar | Baiersdorf | Bocholt | Bullinger, Heinrich* |
| Alsace | Baiertal | Bogaert, Pieter | Bünderlin, Hans |
| Althamer, Andreas* | Balthasar Grasbanntnr | Böger, Salomon | Bure, Idelette de |
| Alzey | (S) | Bohemia | Busschaert, Hans |
| Ameland | Bamberg | Bolsward | Calvin |
| Amersfoort | Ban | Bolt, Eberli | Calvinism and |
| Amon, Hans | Baptism | Bondgenoten | Mennonitism |
| Amsdorf | Barsingerhorn | Bosch, Siegmund von | Campanus, Johannes |
| Amsterdam | Bartel de Boeckbinder | Bossert, Gustav* | Capito, Wolfgang |
| Anabaptist | Bartholomeus van den | Bosshard, Marx | Carinthia |
| Anabaptist Fund (S) | Berge | Both, Hans | Carlstadt, Andreas |
| Anabaptist Memorial | Bartholomeus Panten | Bouterwek, K. W.* | Cassander, Georg |
| Anastasius Veluanus | Basel | Braght, T. J. van* | Castelberger, Andreas |
| Andreae, Jacob | Bastiaen | Braidl, Klaus | Castellio, Sebastien |
| Anna von Oldenburg | Batenburg, Jan van | Braitmichel, Kaspar* | Catabaptist |
| Annales Anabaptistici | Bavaria | Brandenburg-Ansbach | Cate, S. B. ten* |

- Catharina Somerhuys Denmark
 Catholicism and Detmer, A. H.*
 Anabaptism Deutsche Theologie
 Catrou, Francois* (See Theologia Deutsch)
 Cellarius, Martin Deventer
 Charles V Devotional Literature
 Chiliasm Diener am Wort
 Christiaan de Rijcke Diener der Notdurft
 Christoffel Fierens Dietrich, Sebastian
 Christoph Dietrichstein
Chronica . . . Diller, Michael Geschychtbibel Dirck Pieters
 Chronicles, Hutterite Dirk Philips
 Chur Discipleship (S)
 Church Discipline
 Claes Praet Disputations
 Clarenbach, Adolf Divorce
 Clemens, Epistle No. IV Divorce from Clement Dirksz Unbelievers
 Cleve, Duchy Doctrinal Writings
 Cleve, Town Donauwörth
 Clock, Leenaerdt Donner, Hans
 Cochlaeus, Johannes* Doopsgezind
 Colmar Dornaert, Hans
 Cologne Doornik
 Communion Dordrecht
 Communism and Dorfbrunner, Leonhard
 Mennonites Doucher, Susanna
 Community of Goods Drechsel, Thomas
Compromis Dress
 Concept of Cologne Duncanus, Martin*
Concerning a True Dunin-Borkowski*
 Soldier of Christ Durlach
 Concordance Dusentschuer, Johann
 Concordat of Zürich, etc. Düsseldorf
 Conference East Friesland
 Confessions of Faith East Prussia
 Confirmation Ebbe Pieterszoon
 Confiscation of Property Echsel, Wilhelm
 Constance Eckhart, Johannes Conversion Economic History,
 Coornhert, D. V. Hutterite
 Coppenol Edam
 Cornelis Adriaenz Eder, Georg*
 Cornelis de Vlaminck Eder, Marx
 Cornelius, Carl Adolf* Education, Hutterite
Corte Belijdenisse Edzard I
 Corvinus, Antonius* Edzard II
 Counter Reformation Eenkes, Rippert
 Covenant Theology Eglauch, Caspar
 Coventry Egli, Emil*
 Crafts, Hutterian Ehrenpreis, Peter (S)
 Brethren Eibenschitz
 Crefeld Eichen, Christoph
 Dachser, Jacob Eiderstedt
 Damas Eifel
 Danzig Menn. Church Elbing
 Dathenus, Petrus Elder
 David Joris Eleutherobios, Leonhard
 Davidjorists Eleutherobios, Stoffel
 David van der Leyen Elisabeth Dirks
 Dax, Leonhard Emden
 Deacon Emden Disputation
 Delft Emmental
 Demolition of Dwellings Emmius, Ubbo*
 Denk, Hans Enchiridion
- England
 Enkhuizen
 Enno I
 Enno III
 Entfelder, Christian Enthusiasts
 Epistles, Anabaptist
 Erasmus
 Erbe, Fritz
 Erfordter, Antoni
 Erhard, Christoph*
 Eschatology
Esdras IV
 Esslingen
 Esslinger, Wolfgang
 Esztergom
 Ethics (S)
Etliche schöne . . .
 Geseng
 Europe
 Eusebius
 Evangelism
 Evert Hendricks
 Ewsum, Christoffer van
 Excommunication Exile
 Eysvogel, Johann*
 Faber, Engelbert
 Faber, Gellius
 Faber, Johann*
 Faber, Johannes*
 Fabricius, Theodor
 Faes, Dirks
 Fälber, Leonhard
 Falder, Het
 Falk, Jacob
 Falkenstein
 Farwendel
 Fasser, Georg
 Fasting
 Felbinger, Klaus
 Ferdinand I Fest, Ludwig
 Feyerer, Hans
 Fichter, Konrad
 Fije
 Fije Danen
 Fill
 Fischer, C. A.*
 Fischer, Gall
 Fischer, Michael Flanders
 Fleiner, Joachim
 Flemish Mennonites
 Footwashing
 Formula of Concord
Foundation (Menno)
 Fox, John*
 Franck, Caspar*
 Franck, Sebastian*
 Franeker
 Frankenthal Disputation
 Frankfurt a. M.
 Frederick (Oldenburg)
 Frederick (Württemberg)
- Free Will Freistadt
 Fresenburg
 Frey, Claus
 Freyberg, Helene
 Freyberg, Helene (S)
 Friesen, Georg
 Friesland
 Frischlin, Nikodemus*
 Frisian Mennonites
Froschauer Bible
 Fuchsberger, Ortolf*
 Fulda
 Füsslin, Johann Conrad*
 Gabrielites
 Galleys
 Gast, Johann*
 Gasteiger, Christian
 Geeraerd van de Walle
 Geertruydt
 Geertruydt Adriaens
Geestelijck Liedt
 Boecxken
Geistliches
 Blumengärtlein
 Gelassenheit
 Gemeindeordnungen
 Geneva
 Gent
 Gentner, Hans
 George the Bearded
 George Frederick
 Gerbel, Nikolaus
 Gerber, Wälti
 Gerbert, Camill*
 Germany
 Gerrit van Byler
 Gerrit Cornelisz
 Gerrit Hazenpoet
 Gerrits, Brixius
 Gerrits van Emden
 Gerritsz, Lubbert
 Gerstungen
Geschichte der Bernischen Täufer
Geschichte der Märtyrer
 Gespauwde Klauw
Gesprächbüchlein
Getreue Warnung
 Geyersbühler, Nikolaus
 Gherlandi, Giulio
Ghesangen, Het Boeck
 der Giethoorn
 Giger, Gabriel
 Gillis van Aken
 Gillis Gusseme
 Glait, Oswald
 Glaser, Bastel
 Glock, Paul
 Gmünd, Schwäbisch
 Gnapheus, Guilhelmus
 Goch
 Göding
 Goebel, Max*

- Goldschmidt,
 Heinrich
 Goldschmidt,
 Ottelia
 Goller, Balthasar
 Göschl, Martin
 Gostal
 Gotha
 Gouda
 Grafeneck, Klaus von Gran
 Graz
 Grebel, Conrad
 Gredig, Valentin
 Greiner, Blasius
 Gremser, Hansel
 Gresbeck, Heinrich*
Greuwel der . . .
 Haupt-Ketzeren
 Griesbacher, Wilhelm
 Griesinger, Onophrius
 Grisons
 Grombach
 Groningen
 Gross, Jakob
 Gross, Veronika
 Grossmann, Kaspar
 Grouw
 Gruber, Lamprecht
 Grumbach, Argula
 Grünberger, Veit
 Grünfelder, Hans
 Grüningen
 Grünwald, Georg
 Gsäl, Waltan
 Gufidaun
Güldene Aepffel
 Guldin, Nikolaus
 Günzlhofen
 Gurtzham, Hans
 Haarlem
 Haemstede, Adriaen
 Haetzer, Ludwig
 Haffner, Hans
 Hainaut
 Halberstadt
 Half-Anabaptist
 Hall
 Hallau
 Haller, Berchthold
 Hamelmann, Hermann*
 Hamster, Hans
Handbüchlein
 Hans Bret
 Hans Dornaert
 Hans Knevel
 Hans van Munstdorp
 Hans van Overdamm
 Hans Scheerder
 Hans Vermeersch
 Hansmann, Hans
 Hardenberg, Albert
 Häring, Christina
 Harlingen
 Hartitsch, Dietrich von
 Hartz
- Hasel
 Haslibacher, Hans
 Haslibacher Lied
 Haslinger, Leonhard
 Hastenrath, Theunis
 Haug, Jörg
 Hauser, Josef
 Hazerswoude
 Heerenveen
 Hege, Christian*
 Heilbronn
 Hellrigl, Ursula
 Helwys, Thomas
 Hendrick Alewijnsz
 Hendrik van Arnhem
 Hendrik Maelschap
 Hendrik Naeldeman
 Hendrik Terwoort
 Hendrik Verstralen
 Henric Roll
 Heppenheim
 Herman Timmerman
 Herman van Vlekwijk
 Herrmann, Jerome
 Herrmann, Thomas
 Hersfeld
 Hershberger
 's Hertogenbosch
 Hesse
 Hesseling, Pieter
 High Germans
 Hinwil
 Historical Libraries
 Historiography
 Hochrütiner, Lorenz
 Hoeh, Cornelis
 Hofmann, Melchior
 Hofmeister, Sebastian
 Hohenberg
 Hohenlohe
 Hohenwittlingen
 Holstein
 Holwerd
 Hondshoote
 Hoop Scheffer, J. G.*
 Hoorn
 Horb Horsch, John*
 Hortensius, Lambertus*
 Hottinger, Hans
 Hottinger, Jakob
 Hotz, Hans
 Hoyte, Rienx
 Hubmaier, Balthasar
 Huf, Lorenz
 Hugwald, Ulrich
 Huiskooopers
 Humanism
 Humstervrede
 Hungary Hut, Hans
 Hutscher, Ulrich
 Hutter, Jakob
 Hutterian Brethren
 Hutterite Missioners
- Hymnology
 Ickelsamer, Valentin
 Ieper
 Illikhoven
 Illingen
 Imbroich,
 Thomas van Immersion
 Immersion (S)
 Imperial Recesses Incarnation
 Infant Baptism
 Ingolstadt
 Inn Valley
 Inquisition
 Intzinger, Franz
 Italy
 Jacob van Campen
 Jacob Geldersman
 Jacob van Ossenbrug
 Jacob de Rore
 Jacob Scheedemaker
 Jacob . . . Weghe
 Jacobs, Jan
 Jacobs, Rijk
 Jacobsz, Anthoni
 Jacques d'Auchy
 Jan Block
 Jan Claesz
 Jan Everts
 Jan van Geelen
 Jan van Genck
 Jan Geerts
 Jan Jansz Brant
 Jan van Leyden
 Jan Matthijsz (Haarlem)
 Jan Matthysz
 (Middelburg)
 Jan van Ophoorn
 Jan Poote
 Jan Schut
 Jan Smeitgen
 Jan van Sol
 Jan de Swarte
 Jan Trypmaker
 Jan Vervest
 Jan Wagenmaker
 Jan van de Walle
 Jan Willemsz
 Jan Woutersz
 Janjacobs gesinden
 Janneken van Munstdorp
 Jannetgen
 Matthijsdochter
 Jannetje Thijsdochter
 Jansz, Cornelis
 Jater
 Jaussling, Ulrich
 Jedelshauser, Hans
 Jehring, J. C.*
 Jena
 Jeronimus Segersz
 Jever
 Joachim of Floris
 Joachim Vermeeren
- John Casimir
 John III
 John Frederick I
 John Frederick II
 John the Steadfast Jonas, Justus*
 Joos Kint
 Joos de Tollenaere
 Joost Verbeeck
 Joost Verkindert
 Joriaen Ketel
 Joriaen Simonsz
 Joris Leerse
 Joris Wippe
Judicium
 Jülich
 Juridical Procedures
 Kaiser, Leonhard
 Kalleken Strings
 Käls, Hieronymus
 Kampner, Agatha
 Karel van Gent*
 Karg, Georg
 Kaspar
 Kaufbeuren
 Kautz, Jakob
 Keller, Ludwig*
 Kempen
 Keppel, Wilhelm
 Kerssenbroick,
 Hermann*
 Kesselsdorf Ketelbueter
Ketzer-Historie
Ketzer-Lexikon
 Kiessling, Hans
 Kirchenordnungen
 Kiss
 Kitzbühel
 Klausen
 Kleinhäuffer
 Kloppeis, Johan
 Knipperdolling,
 Bernhard
 Köhler, Walther*
 Kolb, Andreas
 Kolb, Franz
 Komander, Johann
 Königsberg (Franken)
 Kortrijk
 Kotte, Johann
 Kotter, Eustachius
 Krafft, Adam
 Krafft, Hans
 Kräl, Hans
 Kreckting, Hinrich
 Krems
 Kress, Simon
 Kreuzenstein
 Kreuznach
 Kriegsheim
 Krohn, B. N.*
 Kromau
 Kropf, Daniel
 Krufft, Heinrich
 Krummhörn

- Krüsi, Johannes Kufstein
 Kühler, W. J.*
 Kühn, Johannes*
 Küngl, Wolfgang
Kunstbuch
 Kuntersweg
 Kuonle, Lienhard
 Kürnbach
 Kürschner, Michael
 Kürschner, Wolf
 Kymaeus, Johann*
 Landes family
 Landis, Hans
 Landshut Landtsperger, Johannes*
 Lang, Laux
 Lang, Matthäus
 Langenmantel, Eitelhans
 Langnau
 Lanzensiel, Leonhard
 Lasco, John á
 Laurens van der Leyen
 Laurens van de Walle
 Leenaert Bouwens
 Leeuwarden
 Leeuwarden Disputation
 Leiden
 Lemke
 Lenaert Plovier
 Lengbach
 Lenz, Paul
 Leoben
 Leserlin, Georg
 Leupold, Hans
 Levina
 Liebich, Jörg
 Liechtenstein, John VI
 Liechtenstein, Leonhard
Liedeken, Een
Lieder der Hutterischen
 Lienz
 Lier
 Liesveldt, Jacob
Lietboeck
Lietboecxken, Een
 Lille
 Limburg
 Linck, Wenceslaus*
 Lind, Esaias
 Lindanus, Wilhelmus
 Lingg, Martin
 Link, Johannes*
 Linz
 Literature,
 Mennonites in Lo, Peter
 Lober, Julius
 Lochmaier, Leonhard
 Lochy
 London
 Lorch
 Lord's Supper
 Lörarach
- Loserth, Johann*
 Louis V
 Lourens, Janssen
 Love
 Löwenberg
 Lower Rhine
 Loysen
 Lübeck
 Lucerne
 Luies, Jan
 Lundenburg
 Lüneburg
 Lügen
 Luther, Martin
 Lysken Dirks
 Maastricht
 McGlothlin, W. J.*
 Maerten Jansz C.
 Maeyken Boosers
 Maeyken Christaens
 Maeyken de Corte
 Maeyken Floris
 Maeyken Trams
 Maeyken Wens
 Maeyken Wouters
 Mainz
 Mair, Wolf
 Maldegem, Jacques
 Maler, Gregor
 Malsch
 Mandates
 Mander, Karel van Mändl, Hans
 Mändl, Jakob
 Manelfi, Pietro
 Manuscripts
 Manz, Felix
 Marbach, Johann
 Marburg
 Margaret of Parma
 Marie Baernt G.
 Marienburger Werder
 Mariken
 Mariken Jansdochter
 Marital Avoidance
 Marius, Augustin*
 Markirch
 Marpeck, Pilgram
 Marriage
 Marriage, Hutterite
 Marschalck, Haug
 Martijntgen Aelmeers
 Martin van der Straten
 Martyr Books
 Martyrdom, Theology
 Martyrs
 Martyrs, Anonymous
 Martyrs' Mirror
 Martyrs' Synod
 Mary Joris
 März, Joachim
 Maskowitz
 Mathesius, Johannes Mattheus Bernaerts
 Matthias, Emperor
- Matthias Servaes
 Matthijs, Hans
 Maulbronn
 Maurice, Duke
 Maurice of Orange
 Medicine, Hutterite
 Meenen
 Meetinghouses
 Melanchthon, Philip*
 Melander, Dionysius*
 Melchiorites
 Melk
 Memmingen
 Memmingen Resolutions
 Menius, Justus*
 Menno Simons
 Meran
 Meshovius, Arnold*
 Metken
 Meulen, J. P. van der
 Meulen, Quiryn van der
 Meyer, Christian*
 Meyer, Fridolin
 Meyer, Sebastian
 Michelsburg
 Michiel
 Michiel, the Widower
 Micronius, Martinus*
 Middelburg
 Mierevelt, Michiel
 Miertgen
 Ministers, Hutterite
 Ministry
 Ministry, Call
 Missions, Foreign Mittermaier, Hans
 Mittersill
 Mixed Marriage
 Moded, Herman
 Mödling
 Moibanus, Ambrosius
 Möller, Georg
 Möller, Heinrich
 Möller, Jobst
 Monnikendam
 Moravia
 Mühlhausen
 Muhr, Hans
 Muiden
 Muliers, Pierson de Müller, Ernst*
 Müller, Gallus
 Müller, Johannes*
 Müller, Johannes Müller, Karl*
 Müllner, Ulrich
 München-Gladbach
 Munich
 Münster Anabaptists
 Müntzer, Thomas
 Musa, Antonius
 Musculus, Wolfgang*
 Music, Church
 Mutual Aid
 Myconius, Oswald
 Nadler, Hans
- Names
 Nauk, Martin
 Neff, Christian*
 Negri, Francesco
 Nemschitz
 Nespitzer, Georg
 Netherlands
Neue Zeytung
 Neumühl
 Neustadt-Goedens
 Newman, A. H.*
 Nicasen Aelmeers
 Nicolaes, Hendrik
Nicodemus, Gospel of Nicolai, Gerhard*
 Nicolai, Melchior*
Nieu Liedenoock
 Nikolsburg
 Nikolsburg Articles
 Nikolschitz
 Nippold, Friedrich*
 Nonconformity
 Nonresistance
 Norden
 Nördlingen
 North Holland
 Norwich
 Nürnberg
 Oath
 Obbe Philips
 Obbes, Nittert
 Oberlehen
 Ochino, Bernardino
 Ochsenbach
 Ochsentreiberin
 Odenbach, Johann
 Odenkirchen Oecolampadius*
 Oelbronn
 Oetisheim
 Oetting
Offer des Heeren
 Old Testament
 Oldeklooster
 Oldenburg
 Oldersum
 Oldesloe
 Olivi, Petrus (S)
 Olmütz
 Oppelsbohm
 Ordinances
 Ordnungsbrieft
 Original Sin
 Ortlep, Christoph
 Osiander, Andreas*
 Osiander, Lucas
 Ossweil
 Ostorodt, Christoph
 Otter, Jakob
 Ottius, J. H.*
 Otto Henry
 Outerman, Jacques
 Overd'hage, Petrus
 Palatinate
 Pappenheim
 Paracelsus

- Paraditz
 Pausram
 Pellertitz
 Penzenauer, Hans
 Pergen
 Pestel, Peter
 Peter Bruynen
 Peter van Coelen
 Peter van Olmen
 Peter Simons
 Peter Witses
 Petersberg
 Pfalz-Zweibrücken
 Pfeddersheim
 Pfersfelder, Elisabeth
 Pfersfelder, Georg
 Pfistermeyer, Hans
 Pforzheim
 Philip Mutsemeker
 Philippites
 Philip of Hesse
 Pieter de Guliker
 Pieter de Houtzager
 Pieter Pieters
 Pieter Stayaerts
 Pieter Willemsz
 Pillowitz
 Pistor, Georg
 Plattner, Hans
 Platzter, Jacob
 Platzter, Melchior
 Plener, Philipp
 Pochtitz
 Poor, Care of Popitz
 Portner, Jakob
 Prayer
 Prele, Paul
 Preubler, Andreas
 Pribitz
 Protzka
 Psalms
 Pulgram Punishment
 Pürcher, Andreas
 Pürchner, Hans
 Pustertal
Quellen z. Geschichte
 Rabe, Ludwig
 Rack, Jörg
 Radical Reformation
 Raphael van der Velde
 Ratheim, Gisbert von Rattenberg
Reason and Obedience
Rechenschaft
 Reformed Authors
 Regel, Georg
 Regensburg
Regensburger Ordnung
 Reimann, Heini
 Reinhardtsbrunn
 Religious Liberty
 Resch, Ambrosius
 Restitution
 Reublin, Wilhelm
 Reutlingen
 Reytse Aysesz
 Rhegius, Urban*
 Rheydt
 Riedemann, Peter
 Ries, Hans de
 Rietmaker, Abraham
 Rink, Melchior
 Ritschl, Albrecht*
 Rizzeto, Antonio
 Robbertsz, Robbert*
 Roermond
 Rooman, Gillis
 Roosevelt, Hendrik van
 Rossitz
 Rostock
 Roth, Friedrich*
 Roth, Leonhard
 Rothenburg
 Rothenfelder, Jörg
 Rothenfels
 Rothmann, Bernhard
 Rottenburg
 Rotterdam
 Rudolph (S)
 Ruegger, Hans
 Rüsser, Niklaus
 Rutschmann, Rudolph
 Sabbatarian
 Anabaptists (S)
 Sacrament
 Sacramentists
 Sailer, Wolfgang
 St. Gall
 Salminger, Sigmund
 Salmuth, Johann
 Salutations (S)
 Salzburg
 Sander Woutersz
 Sankt Johann
 Sartorius, Johannes Sattler, Michael Saxony
 Schabaelje, J. P.
 Schädowitz (S)
 Schaffhausen
 Scharnschlager, Leupold
 Schenck, George
 Schiedam
 Schiemer, Leonhard
 Schijn, Herman
 Schlaffer, Hans
 Schleithem
 Schmid, Bastl
 Schmid, Hans
 Schmid, Konrad*
 Schmidt, Hans
 Schnabel, Georg
 Schneider, Michael Schon...Gesangbüchlein Schornbaum, Karl* Schorndorf
 Schützenecker, Hans
 Schützinger, Simon
 Schwenckfeld, Caspar (S)
 Schwerdtler
 Sega, Francesco della
 Seid, Katharina
 Sepp, Christian*
 Sermons
 Sermons, Hutterite
 Servetus, Michael Seu, Johannes*
 Sichern, van
 Sicke Freerks
 Sigismund III
 Signau
 Sijntgen van Roesselare
 Silesia
 Simon Michielsz
 Simplicity
 Singing, Hutterite
 Sleep of the Soul
Slotel, Die
 Slovakia
 Smalcus, Valentinus
 Smyth, John
 Sneek
 Sobotiste
 Social Background
 Socinianism
 Socinus
 Soetken Gerrits
 Soetken van den Houtte
 Solothurn
 Sommelsdijk
 Sorga
 Spaarndam
 Speyer, Diet of Spiritualism
 Spittellaier, Hans
 Spittelmayer, Ambrosius
 Stadler, Ulrich
 State, Attitude Toward Steinabrunn
 Steinsdorf, Hans
 Steyr
 Strasbourg
 Strasbourg Conferences
 Strasbourg Discipline
 Strasser, Gottfried*
 Streicher, Helena (S)
 Stübner, Markus
 Stumpf, Simon
 Sturm, Hans
 Styria
Successio Anabaptistica
 Summerauer, Leonhard
 Swabian League
 Swaen Rutgers
 Sweet or Bitter Christ
 Swiss Brethren
 Swiss Brethren in Moravia
 Switzerland
 Tanneken
 Tanneken van der Leyen
 Tauber, Caspar
 Taxation
Testamentalerleütterung
Theologia Deutsch
 Theology, Anabaptist Thessalonica
 Theunisz, Jan
 Thijs Joriaensz
 Thomas Fransson
 Thum von Neuburg
 Thuringia
 Tiel
 Tirol
 Titelman, Pieter
 Tiziano
 Tjaert Renicx
 Transdanubia (S)
 Treyer, Jakob
 Trijnen Keuts
 Trijntgen
 Troeltsch, Ernst*
 Tryntgen
 Tryon, Pieter
 Tunes
 Turmbücher
 Twente
 Twisck, P. J.
 Uhrmacher, Hans (S)
 Ulm
 Ulrich (Württemberg)
 Unitarianism
 Universalism
 Uolmann, Wolfgang
 Utrecht, City
 Vadian
 Valerius
 Schoolmeester
Veelderhande Liedekens
 Veh, Cornelius
 Veldthaler, Michael
 Velke Levary
 Verantwortung
Verantwortung
Verantwortung
 Verbond
 Verbond der vier Steden
Vermanung
 Verspeck, Albert
 Vienna
 Vlissingen
 Vogel, Wolfgang
 Vondel, Joost van den
Von dem unverschamp-ten träfel
 Vorarlberg
 Vos, Karel*
 Vreden
 Wädenswil
 Walch, Johannes Waldhauser, Thomas
 Waldshut (S)
 Walpot, Peter
 Warendorf

Wassenberger Prädikanten	Wijnsem, van	Worship, Public	Zelis
Waterlanders	Willeboort Cornelisz	Wostitz	Zell, Katharina
Wels	Willem Drooch- scheerder	Württemberg	Zell, Mathäus
Wenger, Georg	Willem de Cuyper	Würtzlburger, Augustin	Zerotin
Wernlin, Jörg	Willem Jansz	Würzburg	Zieglschmid, A. J. F.*
Wesel	William I of Orange	Yetelhauser, Michael	Zierikzee
West Prussia	Wismar (S)	Zaandam	Znaim
Westerburg, Gerhard	Wismar Resolutions	Zapff, Hauptrecht	Zobel, George
Westphalia	Witmarsum	Zaug, Hans	Zofingen Disputation
Weynken Claes	Wolkan, Rudolf*	Zaunmacher, Ulrich	Zollikon
Wideman, Jakob	Women, Status of	Zaunring, Georg	Zuckenhammer, Hans
Widertoufferen	Workum	Zedo, Nikolaus	Zürich
ursprung	Wormer	Zeeland	Zürich-Lied
Widlingmaier, Anna	Worms	Zehentmaier, Martin	Zwickau Prophets
	Worms Prophets	Zeising, Johannes	Zwingli, Huldrych